PRESEASON - WEEK 1

WASHINGTON REDSKINS (0-0) vs. NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS (0-0)

Thursday, Aug. 7 — 7:30 p.m. ET FedExField (85,000) — Landover, Md.

REDSKINS HOST PATRIOTS IN 2014 PRESEASON DEBUT

The Washington Redskins will open their 2014 preseason slate at home on Thursday, Aug. 7, as the Redskins host the New England Patriots at FedExField. Kickoff is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

The contest on Thursday won't be the first time these teams will see one another, as the two franchises are scheduled to conduct joint practices with one another at the Bon Secours Washington Redskins Training Center in Richmond, Va. on Aug. 4-6. The teams will conduct joint sessions over three days in advance of the game.

The game will be the NFL preseason head coaching debut of Jay Gruden, who assumed head coaching duties on Jan. 9. Throughout training camp, Gruden has emphasized the importance of the team's four preseason games in evaluating players for the 53-man roster.

"It's [the] early stages of our evaluating process, but we do have a good feel for the guys, but only time will tell," Gruden said. "You have to let the games be the main evaluator, not just coming out here in shorts at walk-throughs and practice. So the games are going to be a major part of how we evaluate the bottom half of the roster and the backups and the depth of our team."

ALUMNI CENTER

Formally organized in 1958, the Washington Redskins Alumni Association was the first organization of its kind in the country. The organization spearheaded the alumni movement among former professional football players and was the model for other alumni groups that later formed in all NFL cities. Now entering its 56th year, the Alumni Association continues to celebrate those who have contributed to more than eight decades of Redskins football dating back to the team's inception in 1932.

The primary objectives of the Redskins Alumni are promoting a continuing interest in current and past players of the Washington Redskins, as well as promoting and fostering interest and funding for charitable purposes. With respect to the latter, the alumni conduct fundraising events to raise money that can be donated to charitable organizations or used in other ways to help improve the quality of life for youth in the Greater Washington community.

Today, Redskins alumni continue to make their presence known throughout the community. As a very active chapter of the NFL Alumni Association, their motto is "Caring for Kids." In addition to the numerous events and appearances Redskins Alumni participate in throughout the year, they hold two major fundraising events of their own — the Redskins Alumni Charity Golf Classic, now in its 36th year, and the annual Washington Redskins Welcome Home Luncheon, now in its 53rd year.

The alumni have an office at Redskins Park and can be reached at 703-726-7488. Since his arrival in Washington in December of 2009, President/General Manager Bruce Allen has made it a priority to build a bridge to the franchise's historic past. During the Redskins' NFC East title-winning season in 2012, that mission came to the forefront as the team celebrated its 80th anniversary.

"This year, the Washington Redskins will be celebrating our 80th anniversary season. I'm proud to be with the franchise in our nation's capital, one with such a rich tradition and gloried past on and off the field," Allen said in a July 2012 column filling in for Sports Illustrated's Peter King. "The current Redskins players, coaches, fans and staff owe a big debt of gratitude to the people who have made the Redskins one of the flagship franchises in sports."

Throughout the 2012 offseason, the Redskins traversed the Washington D.C./Maryland/Virginia area as part of the team's 'Thank You Tour,' which brought players, coaches, alumni, cheerleaders, team officials and more to fans throughout the entire region to help celebrate the team's historic heritage.

That heritage continues to be honored amongst the game's elite, as in August 2011, former Redskin great Chris Hanburger was enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio. He was presented by his son, Chris. Hanburger was voted into the Hall after being a nominee of the seniors committee. In all, he waited 28 years to be elected.

Hanburger joined Darrell Green (2008), Art Monk (2008) and Russ Grimm (2010) to make four players who spent the majority of their careers with the Redskins to earn the honor in the past five years. In addition, former Redskins Bruce Smith (2009) and Deion Sanders (2011) have also been elected over that time. Hanburger said of his election to the Hall of Fame: "It's wonderful, I'm overwhelmed. It's just such a tremendous honor to even be nominated, let alone be voted in. You have to think about all of the men that played before I did, certainly the men that I played with and against, and then you look at the guys playing now. It's just a select few that make it in. I was fortunate to play with players on the Redskins defense that made it all work for me."

On Friday, Aug. 22, the Washington Redskins Charitable Foundation and Redskins Alumni Association will host the 53rd annual Welcome Home Luncheon at the Gaylord National Resort and Convention Center in National Harbor, Md. The annual event celebrates the burgundy and gold and kicks off each football season with Redskins players, coaches and alumni.

The Redskins Welcome Home Luncheon is annually the only event where fans and corporate partners have the chance to spend time with the entire Redskins team. Each table is guaranteed at least one player or coach seated with the attendees. Proceeds from the event benefit the youth programs of the Washington Redskins Charitable Foundation and Redskins Alumni Association.

The Redskins used the 2013 event to honor its players for their contributions both on and off the field. Quarterback Robert Griffin III earned the 2012 Bobby Mitchell Offensive Player of the Year award, linebacker London Fletcher earned the 2012 Sam Huff Defensive Player of the Year award, and kicker Kai Forbath earned the 2012 Mark Moseley Player of the Year award. Additionally, the team handed out its annual Community Service Award, and former fullback Eric Kettani – a Lieutenant in the Naval Reserves – accepted the USAA Salute to Service Award. Winners from the 2013 season will be announced at the 2014 event.

Also among the Redskins Alumni Association's premier events is the team's annual Homecoming celebration, which the Redskins hosted in 2013 during the team's Week 9 win against San Diego. Not including staff and coaches, former players in attendance at various events throughout the weekend accounted for more than 600 seasons of Redskins service, 98 Super Bowl appearances and 56 Super Bowl wins. The team welcomed back 32 of the 80 Greatest Redskins, 19 Ring of Fame members and six Pro Football Hall of Famers as part of the celebration. The team wore their throwback uniforms, a modern interpretation of the ones worn by the franchise during their first year in Washington in 1937, when rookie quarterback Sammy Baugh led the Redskins to their first world championship. This season's Homecoming Weekend is scheduled for the weekend leading up to the Redskins' Oct. 19 date with the Tennessee Titans.

HEAD COACH JAY GRUDEN

Jay Gruden was named the 29th head coach of the Washington Redskins on January 9, 2014.

Excluding interim coaches, Gruden, 46, became the team's youngest head coaching hire since hiring eventual Pro Football Hall of Famer Joe Gibbs at 40 years of age in 1981. He became the first Redskins coach hired directly from an offensive coordinator role on another team since Norv Turner in 1994.

Before joining the Redskins, Gruden spent his previous three seasons as offensive coordinator for the Cincinnati Bengals. In his tenure in Cincinnati, the Bengals averaged 10 wins a season, making three consecutive playoff appearances and earning an AFC North championship in 2013. Members of the Bengals' offense accounted for seven Pro Bowl selections in his three seasons in Cincinnati.

Gruden was tasked with the development of quarterback Andy Dalton, a 2011 second-round pick. In three seasons together, Gruden helped Dalton to a 30-18 regular season record as a starter (.625), as Dalton's 30 wins in that time frame ranked tied for fifth-most among NFL quarterbacks. Dalton's 80 passing touchdowns rank third-most in NFL history for a quarterback in his first three seasons, trailing only Dan Marino (98) and Peyton Manning (85).

Prior to joining the Bengals, Gruden served two years with the Florida Tuskers of the United Football League from 2009-10. In 2009, Gruden served as offensive coordinator under current Redskins defensive coordinator Jim Haslett as the Tuskers compiled a 6-0 regular season record and earned a UFL championship game berth. In 2010, he assumed the roles of head coach and general manager and led the Tuskers to their second consecutive championship game appearance.

Gruden coached for seven seasons (2002-08) with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, earning a Super Bowl championship ring as an offensive assistant in 2002. There he worked under his brother, Jon, then the Bucs' head coach, and current Redskins Executive Vice President/General Manager Bruce Allen, the Bucs' general manager from 2004-08. Gruden helped guide the Buccaneers to the team's first league championship, a 48-21 victory in Super Bowl XXXVII.

Gruden also ranks among the most outstanding players and coaches in the history of the Arena Football League, having won six combined league championships – four as a quarterback and two as a head coach. Gruden played quarterback (2002-03) and served as head coach (2004-08) of the AFL's Orlando Predators, all while simultaneously working as an offensive assistant with the Buccaneers. In all, Gruden served as head coach of the Predators for nine seasons (1998-2001 and 2004-08), leading the Predators to four championship game appearances and two league titles as a coach. During a two-year hiatus from coaching the Predators in 2002-03, he returned to the playing field as Orlando's quarterback, leading the Predators to playoff appearances in both seasons.

In his eight seasons as a player in the AFL, Gruden completed 1,673-of-2,775 passes (60.3 percent) for 21,578 yards with 398 touchdowns and 99 interceptions. In addition to his time with Orlando, he spent six seasons (1991-96) at quarterback for the Tampa Bay Storm, winning four AFL titles and being named MVP of ArenaBowl VII in 1993. He was also named the 1992 AFL Most Valuable Player and was honored with induction into the AFL Hall of Fame in 1999.

Gruden played quarterback for four seasons for former Redskins draft pick Howard Schnellenberger at the University of Louisville (1985-88) and was a two-time team MVP.

Gruden was born March 4, 1967 in Tiffin, Ohio. He and his wife, Sherry, have three sons — J.J., Joey and Jack.

Jay Gruden, 46, became the youngest head coach hired by the Redskins on a non-interim basis since the team hired 40-year-old Joe Gibbs in 1981.

WHAT THEY SAID ABOUT GRUDEN'S HIRE

"I'm ecstatic for Jay. From the first time we met I've been a Jay Gruden fan, and I'm grateful for what he did for us, his work with a young quarterback and helping take us where we've been, the last three seasons in the playoffs. I knew he might get this kind of opportunity, of course, so it's not a surprise, and I just wish him all the best."

*- Bengals Head Coach Marvin Lewis
Coached with Gruden for the Cincinnati Bengals from 2011-13*

"Jay's first year was my rookie year, and it was cool coming in together and growing and getting better. One thing that really helped make it smooth for me was that from the start, Jay was big on asking my input, what I'm most comfortable with and any ideas I had. With Jay I had a very positive transition from college to the NFL. I feel fortunate to have had him as my only pro coordinator. He's helped me in a lot of ways."

*- Bengals quarterback Andy Dalton
Coached by Gruden on the Cincinnati Bengals from 2011-13*

"I'm really proud of my brother. He's worked extremely hard to get this opportunity. The Washington Redskins are one of the great NFL franchises. I fully expect him to make the most of this opportunity."

*- Monday Night Football analyst Jon Gruden
Jay's brother, coached together with Tampa Bay from 2002-08*

"I think it was a great hire... The Grudens have a coaching history in that family. The dad worked with the 49ers, and I knew him, and then I know Jon. They're well-suited, they know the ins and outs of this, besides the X's and O's and all that. They know how to handle people, they know what comes with the job, the pressures and all. So I think they did their homework and came up with a guy that will be suited well for the town and for the organization and the football part of it."

- Former Redskins General Manager Bobby Beathard, as told to ESPN 980

"The Washington Redskins got it right Thursday in hiring Jay Gruden as their next head coach."

- Jason Reid of The Washington Post in his Jan. 9 column

On Jan. 9, 2014, Redskins Executive Vice President/General Manager (right) introduced Jay Gruden as the 29th head coach in franchise history. "There's a great history here for the Washington Redskins and there's a lot of pride here," Gruden said. "They [fans] want a winner. They don't expect anything else."

"I called him and left a message. I said, 'Hey, congratulations for this wonderful opportunity that the Redskins have given you and that you're my pride and joy because you've exemplified, more than any of my quarterbacks, perseverance, mental toughness, team above self and just plain stubbornness.' He was my quarterback at Louisville in the first year where we went 2-9. He was my quarterback when we went [3-8] and in the third year we go [3-7-1]. Then for his senior year we go 8-3 and even at 8-3 we couldn't get a bowl yet... He persevered and took the long trip. He didn't go up a smooth trail. He took a winding, hard trail to a head coaching job in the National Football League by being the best quarterback that ever was in Arena Football and being the best coach we've ever had in Arena Football. So now he gets his due reward."

*- Former Coach Howard Schnellenberger
Coached Gruden at Louisville from 1985-88*

"We are very excited for Jay to seize this incredible opportunity with the Washington Redskins. He was an exceptional player and coach in the AFL for many years and has been a tremendous ambassador for the sport of Arena Football. We are proud of all that Jay has been able to accomplish since he first stepped onto an AFL field in 1991 and we look forward to seeing him do great things in Washington for years to come."

- Arena Football League Commissioner Jerry B. Kurz

POSITIONAL PROSPECTUS

QUARTERBACKS

The third season of the well-chronicled career of quarterback Robert Griffin III begins in 2014, as the electric young quarterback enters the season with a new support system in place that includes a former quarterback-turned-head coach in Jay Gruden and a familiar face in newly promoted Offensive Coordinator Sean McVay.

Under the duo of Gruden and McVay, Griffin III will try to recapture the Pro Bowl form that helped him lead Washington to its first NFC East title in 13 years as a rookie in 2012. That season he established Redskins rookie records in pass completions (258), passing yards (3,200), passing touchdowns (20) and rushing yards by a quarterback (815), all while setting NFL records for rookie passer rating (102.4), lowest percentage of passes had intercepted for a rookie (1.27) and rushing yards by a rookie quarterback (815). Griffin III's productive first two seasons already have him on the cusp of breaking into the franchise's top 10 in most passing categories, as he currently sits 11th in team history in completions (532), 12th in passing yards (6,403) and 12th in passing touchdowns (36).

Griffin III will once again be joined in the quarterback meeting room by Kirk Cousins, a fellow 2012 NFL Draft selection best known for his role in wins against Baltimore and Cleveland during the team's seven-game season-ending winning streak in 2012. Cousins started the final three games of the 2013 season and enters 2014 having seen action in eight career NFL games with four starts, completing 114-of-203 passes for 1,320 yards with eight touchdowns in those appearances. After wearing No. 12 for his first two NFL seasons, Cousins will wear No. 8 in 2014, returning to the number he wore in leading the Michigan State Spartans to 27 wins in three seasons as a starter.

The quarterbacks are rounded out by free agent signing Colt McCoy, the senior statesman of the group at only 27 years of age. Now in his fifth NFL season, McCoy joins the Redskins with a winning pedigree developed at the collegiate level at Texas from 2006-09, where he temporarily set the record for the most career wins by a starting quarterback in NCAA history (45). At the time of his graduation, McCoy was the only quarterback in history to win at least 10 or more games in each of his four collegiate seasons.

RUNNING BACKS

New Running Backs Coach Randy Jordan inherits running backs that have powered a rushing attack that has been among the league's elite since 2012. The Redskins gained a league-high 4,873 rushing yards on 972 carries across the 2012-13 seasons, and Washington's 5.01 yards per carry average in the those two years marked the best two-year rushing average for the team in franchise history.

The depth chart at running back is expected to once again feature Alfred Morris, the powerful Florida Atlantic product who went from a record-setting sixth-round surprise in 2012 to a Pro Bowler in 2013. In his debut rookie season two years ago, Morris broke Clinton Portis' team record for rushing yards in a season with 1,613 and contributed to the highest rushing total by rookie teammates since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger (2,450). After compiling 1,275 rushing yards in 2013, Morris' 2,888 rushing yards from his first two seasons rank ninth-most in NFL history among players in their first two years. Morris became only the 16th back in NFL history to reach 2,500 rushing yards in his first two seasons, joining illustrious company that includes five Pro Football Hall of Famers: Eric Dickerson (3,913), Earl Campbell (3,147), Barry Sanders (2,774), Curtis Martin (2,639) and Emmitt Smith (2,500).

The group also features two fourth-year backs in Roy Helu, Jr., and Evan Royster, both selected by the Redskins in the 2011 NFL Draft. In their first three seasons, the two have played a combined 66 games in burgundy and gold and earned seven combined starts down the stretch of their rookie year in 2011. In those seven starts, Helu, Jr. and Royster accounted for five 100-yard rushing performances.

The team could potentially have explosive options at running back in the form of second-year back Chris Thompson and rookie sixth-round pick Lache Seastrunk. Thompson, an All-ACC standout at Florida State before being selected in the fifth round of the 2013 NFL Draft, appeared as a kick returner in the first four games of his rookie year with Washington in 2013 before missing the final 12 games of the season with a shoulder injury. The Redskins selected Seastrunk, a first-team All-Big 12 honoree from Baylor, in the sixth round of the 2014 NFL Draft after he compiled 2,189 rushing yards with 18 rushing touchdowns in only 24 collegiate games. The group is also rounded out by rookie free agent Silas Redd, whose collegiate career included experience in pro-style offenses at Penn State and USC.

Fullback Darrel Young has proven to be one of the unsung heroes of the Redskins' attack in recent years both as a blocker and as a receiver. In addition to lead blocking for Washington's prolific running game, he has proven adept with the ball in his hands, tying a team record with three rushing touchdowns (including an overtime game-winner) vs. San Diego and scoring on a career-long 62-yard touchdown reception at Philadelphia last season. Behind Young at fullback is rookie free agent Stephen Campbell, whose start in the NFL came after attending the 2014 New York/New Jersey NFL Regional Combine and the Super Regional Combine in Detroit.

WIDE RECEIVERS

After a year away in Buffalo in 2013, Wide Receivers Coach Ike Hilliard returns to lead the Redskins' receiving corps, a task he held in the same position during the team's 2012 NFC East championship season. Between free agent signings, existing young talent and promising rookies, Hilliard should return to a stocked arsenal.

The group returns the league leader in receptions from a season ago in Pierre Garçon, who became the third player in NFL history to record at least five receptions in every game of a 16-game season en route to breaking Art Monk's single-season Redskins record with 113 receptions in 2013. Garçon was a bright spot for Washington during the season, amassing receptions but also continuing his ferocious blocking in contributing to the Redskins' 2,164 rushing yards.

The NFC East added yet another storyline in the 2014 offseason when Garçon received a new teammate, veteran playmaker DeSean Jackson, who joined the Redskins as a free agent after six seasons in Philadelphia. The explosive three-time Pro Bowler dons burgundy and gold for the first time this season after posting 17 total touchdowns covering 50 yards or more, the most in the NFL, since entering the league in 2008. Yet Jackson wasn't the only playmaking wide receiver the Redskins added in free agency, as the team signed Andre Roberts, who appeared in 62 of 64 possible games and accounted for more than 2,800 all-purpose yards in four years as an Arizona Cardinal from 2010-13.

The new additions are joined by the longest-tenured Redskin on the roster, 13-year veteran Santana Moss, whose 571 career receptions with Washington rank third-most in team history. Also among the options in the passing game are Leonard Hankerson and Aldrick Robinson, two fourth-year members of Washington's 2011 draft class. Hankerson's big hands have accounted for 81 receptions with six receiving touchdowns in three seasons despite fighting injuries. Robinson is a downfield threat who led the Redskins with five receptions of 40-plus yards (four for touchdowns) across the 2012-13 seasons.

Ryan Grant, a 2014 fifth-round pick from Tulane, has drawn praise from Gruden throughout the offseason for his route-running and reliable hands. Nick Williams, is in his second NFL season after going from a college free agent to playing five games for Washington last season. The wide receivers also include free agent Rashad Ross, and college free agents Lee Doss, Cody Hoffman and Rashad Lawrence.

TIGHT END

Wes Phillips assumed control of the Redskins' tight ends in 2014 after former position coach Sean McVay slid into the offensive coordinator role. Phillips joined the Redskins with an eye on technique and a track record that includes mentoring Jason Witten during Phillips' tenure in Dallas.

Despite being limited by injury to only nine games and four starts in 2013, then-rookie Jordan Reed finished the season with 499 yards receiving on 45 catches (11.1 yards per reception), both Redskins rookie records for a tight end. The former third-round pick, who started as a quarterback at Florida before transitioning to tight end during his collegiate career, developed into a matchup nightmare for opponents, none more so than the Chicago Bears, against whom Reed set career highs in receptions (nine) and receiving yards (134) in a win last season. His production is matched by his work ethic, as Reed is frequently noted by reporters to be one of the last players off the practice field, frequently staying after sessions to run routes and catch extra passes.

Former college free agent Logan Paulsen is five years removed from trying to make a name for himself in training camp out of UCLA but has become a jack-of-all-trades for the unit in his four seasons in Washington. Paulsen has played in 59 games in Washington, made 30 starts, increased his receptions numbers in every season, scored in a postseason game and been a crucial contributor on special teams.

Niles Paul enters his fourth NFL season in 2014, his third at tight end after transitioning from wide receiver after his rookie year. Paul has caught 14 career passes but has truly made his impact on special teams, where he has contributed not only as a primary kick returner but also as one of the most devastating gunners in the league in punt coverage. Paul is joined by rookie seventh-round pick Ted Bolser, a University of Indiana product Gruden called a "war daddy" in kickoff coverage. The group is rounded out by Mike Caussin, a local James Madison favorite who was added just prior to training camp.

OFFENSIVE LINE

The Redskins retained Offensive Line Coach Chris Foerster from its previous coaching staff after the respected coach helped Washington become one of only four NFL teams to exceed 2,100 rushing yards in each of the last two seasons (Seattle, San Francisco and Buffalo). With Foerster's lines paving the way, the Redskins averaged 5.01 yards per carry average across the 2012-13 seasons, marking the best two-year rushing average for the team in franchise history and representing the first time the team has gained better than five yards per carry in a two-year span. This season, Foerster will be assisted on staff by Shane Day.

Discussion of the Redskins' offensive line begins at left tackle, where fifth-year vet Trent Williams, a returning team captain who has blossomed into one of the league's elite left tackles. Williams earned Pro Bowl berths in both seasons in which he's started all 16 games (2012 and 2013), Between Williams and former team great Chris Samuels, Redskins left tackles have been selected to six of the last nine Pro Bowls. The incumbent across the line at right tackle is Tyler Polumbus, who signed with Washington in the middle of the 2011 season and has started 35 games for the Redskins in the two-plus seasons since.

The line has a new anchor at center but it comes from a familiar face. Kory Lichtensteiger will snap the ball this season after starting 51 of his 53 games played in Washington since 2010 at left guard. On his right hip is expected to be Chris Chester, who has started all 48 of Washington's regular season games at right guard since joining the team as a free agent prior to the 2011 campaign. At left guard, the team could rely on 2014 free agent signing Shawn Lauva, who started 44 games for the Cleveland Browns across the previous four seasons.

The preseason will offer another opportunity for a couple of young players on the offensive line to assert themselves and earn increased roles. Tom Compton, a 2012 sixth-round pick, played on special teams a season ago and can contribute at tackle when called upon. Guard Josh LeRibeus, a fellow 2012 draftee, was inactive for 16 games in 2013 but will try to regain and improve upon the form that earned him significant action in Washington's 2012 NFC Wild Card game. The third member of that class of offensive linemen drafted by Washington in 2012 is Adam Gettis, an interior lineman who contributed in 13 contests in 2013.

The unit hopes to be bolstered by the addition of two third-round rookies. The Redskins selected tackle Morgan Moses with their first selection of the third round, adding a University of Virginia product whose length will be an asset as he transitions between both the left and right tackle spots. The team also used a third-round pick to select guard Spencer Long, a former Nebraska walk-on who earned a scholarship and impressed with both his performance on the field and in the classroom, becoming a CoSIDA First-Team Academic All-American in 2013.

Seventh-year veteran center/guard Mike McGlynn, fourth-year lineman Maurice Hurt, third-year free agent center Kevin Kowalski and returning practice squad guard Tevita Stevens comprise the rest of an offensive line that will anchor Gruden's new offense in 2014.

DEFENSIVE LINE

Jacob Burney will steer the defensive line as the unit's coach for a fifth consecutive season, helping guide a group of proven contributors and a key free agent addition. Washington's line helped the Redskins allow the fifth-fewest rushing yards in the NFC and ninth-fewest in the NFL across the 2012-13 seasons (103.2 yards per game).

Washington's base three-man line centers around the man in the middle, nose tackle Barry Cofield. The returning two-time defensive captain has been an unsung hero in Washington, frequently drawing praise from the Redskins coaching staff as one of the most underrated nose tackles in the NFL. Cofield enters his fourth season in Washington after having started in all 48 of the Redskins' regular season games since joining the team prior to 2011.

The Redskins' defensive line made a big splash early in free agency, pulling Jason Hatcher away from the division rival Cowboys in mid-March. The ninth-year veteran joins Washington following a career year in which he recorded a career-best 11 sacks en route to his first Pro Bowl selection. Hatcher reunites with his best friend, Stephen Bowen, a ninth-year defensive end returning from injury with whom Hatcher played in Dallas from 2006-10. They help form a veteran core with Kedric Golston, a ninth-year defensive end who has spent his entire career in Washington since being selected in the sixth round of the 2006 NFL Draft.

The group also features a couple of young yet established linemen, among them fourth-year defensive end Jarvis Jenkins, fourth-year nose tackle Chris Neild, third-year lineman Chris Baker and third-year defensive end Doug Worthington all of whom have seen significant rotational snaps (and starts, in the case of Jenkins and Baker) throughout the last several seasons.

Veteran free agent defensive ends Clifton Geathers and Frank Kearse, camp signing Jake McDonough and college free agent nose tackle Robert Thomas represent the other three names on the team's 11-deep roster of linemen entering the 2014 preseason.

LINEBACKERS

Storylines abound for Washington's linebackers, where one familiar name in particular has disappeared from the middle but a surplus of pass rushers awaits for Defensive Coordinator Jim Haslett.

INSIDE LINEBACKERS

The inside linebackers will fall under the purview of a familiar face, Kirk Olivadotti, who returns to the team with which he spent 11 NFL seasons in various capacities from 2000-10 – after three years coaching inside linebackers at the University of Georgia from 2011-13. He is one of 11 members of the Redskins' assistant coach honor roll, which recognizes coaches with at least 10 seasons of service as an assistant in Washington.

Olivadotti and Redskins fans might do a double take early this season with the absence of the NFL's Iron Man at the Mike linebacker position, as four-time Pro Bowler London Fletcher hung up his cleats after 16 seasons of meritorious service. But the unit still features Jack linebacker Perry Riley, Jr., an athletic Fletcher disciple for four years who seldom leaves the field between his defensive and special teams responsibilities.

One of the Redskins' top options at middle linebacker may come from in-house, as coaches have continuously praised third-year linebacker Keenan Robinson throughout the 2014 offseason. The fluid University of Texas product fought injuries to each of his pectoral muscles in his first two NFL seasons and is battling with a bevy of 2014 free agent signings. Among the new additions is eighth-year veteran Akeem Jordan, a Harrisonburg, Va. native and former James Madison Duke. Also included is former Houston Texan Darryl Sharpton and former Tampa Bay Buccaneers special teams captain Adam Hayward.

The inside linebackers also benefit from the presence of Will Compton and Jeremy Kimbrough, two 2013 college free agents who both impressed the coaching staff as rookies a year ago. Compton made his NFL debut in Week 17 last year, and Kimbrough spent the season on injured reserve after suffering an injury in the team's first preseason game in 2013.

OUTSIDE LINEBACKERS

The Redskins identified their pass rush for improvement in 2014, and that focus was evident even in the process of hiring the coaching staff as Gruden brought in pass rush specialist Brian Baker to oversee the outside linebackers. Early in his tenure, Baker has earned rave reviews from players and media for his attention to technique and helping to develop his Pro Bowl duo of pass rushers and his top pick at the position.

Opposing offenses will once again have to account for the man known as Rak, Brian Orakpo, who returned to Washington on a franchise tag after making his third career Pro Bowl with a 10-sack season in 2013. Orakpo sits fifth all-time in sacks in Redskins history and sits 4.5 sacks away from sole possession of third place. He forms half of one of the league's top outside combinations with fourth-year veteran Ryan Kerrigan, a Pro Bowler from the 2012 season who has posted at least 7.5 sacks every season, posted 10 career forced fumbles, recorded two pick-sixes all despite rarely getting a defensive snap away from the field in 48 career games.

LB Brian Orakpo

Orakpo and Kerrigan – products of Texas and Purdue, respectively – are now joined by yet another accomplished college pass rusher in Trent Murphy, whom the Redskins selected with their top selection in the 2014 NFL Draft. Murphy led the NCAA with 15 sacks as a senior in 2013 and offers Washington a pass rusher frequently commended for his bend despite his 6-foot-5 frame.

The Redskins re-signed outside linebacker Rob Jackson, a sixth-year veteran who has reliably contributed in both starting and reserve roles over the past few seasons. The position is completed by Gabe Miller and Adrian Robinson, both of whom joined Washington late in the 2013 campaign, and Everette Brown, who signed with the team during its 2014 training camp on July 28.

DEFENSIVE BACKS

The voice of Defensive Backs Coach Raheem Morris had been omnipresent on the Redskins' practice fields across the 2012-13 seasons, and outside of the transition of Defensive Assistant Aubrey Pleasant, the sound remains the same in 2014.

Morris guides a secondary that features cornerback DeAngelo Hall, who set a team record with three defensive touchdowns in 2013 in putting up one of his most impressive years in his 10th NFL season. "I definitely think that if you put me out there against a receiver, anyone of them, I'll take my chances," Hall said in training camp of his desire to be considered among the NFL's top cornerbacks. "I never said I was the best, but I definitely feel like I should be in the conversation."

CB DeAngelo Hall

Expected to start opposite Hall is second-year cornerback David Amerson, a 2013 second-round pick who announced his presence with a 45-yard interception return for touchdown in a Week 4 win at Oakland last season. The team also signed Super Bowl XLIV hero Tracy Porter, whose 74-yard interception return for touchdown against Peyton Manning helped earn him a championship ring following the 2009 season. Richard Crawford is once again added to the mix at cornerback after a knee injury in the preseason last year cost him the entire 2013 season. In his rookie year in 2012, he saw significant action as a returner and notched a Week 17 interception vs. Dallas.

The unit added rookie Bashaud Breeland from Clemson in the 2014 NFL Draft, and Breeland immediately turned observers' heads with an aggressive, physical style of play during offseason work. He is among the young cornerbacks the Redskins have acquired, including 2012 college free agent Chase Minnifield, first-year player Peyton Thompson and rookie free agent Bryan Shepherd. The group also receives contributions from veteran E.J. Biggers, who has split time between cornerback and safety in his career.

At safety, the Redskins welcome back 13th-year veteran Ryan Clark, the affable 2011 Pro Bowler who spent the 2004-05 seasons in Washington. Clark, who wears No. 21 in practice in honor of his friend, the late Sean Taylor, is expected to play alongside returning safety Brandon Meriweather, an eighth-year veteran who noted in training camp that even he was learning lessons from Clark's presence. The two will attempt to mentor a pair of second-year safeties who were thrust into the spotlight a season ago in Bacarri Rambo and Phillip Thomas. While Thomas' 2013 season was cut short by an injury in the first preseason game, Rambo started three games for Washington in 2013 after being selected in the sixth round of that year's draft.

Trenton Robinson joined the Redskins in the middle of the 2013 season to help buoy the team's kick coverage units and defense in 11 games. Akeem Davis, a rookie linebacker-turned-safety out of Memphis signed by Washington in April, will attempt to continue his roster push, as will Ross Madison, a rookie free agent who played his prep football 10 miles from Redskins Park at Heritage H.S. in Leesburg, Va.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Washington's special teams are now being referenced internally as "special forces," an apt term for a unit now being commanded by former Apache helicopter pilot and eight-year Army veteran Ben Kotwica. He and assistant Bradford Banta will oversee a unit that has been one of the primary focuses of the organization this offseason. Kotwica and Banta have even enlisted the help of several of the team's other position coaches during practices this offseason, illustrating the entire coaching staff's commitment to football's third phase.

Kicker Kai Forbath returns in 2014, two years removed from a 2012 season in which he was signed by the Redskins in Week 6 and immediately set about rewriting league history. Forbath notably converted his first 17 career field goal attempts in 2012, breaking Garrett Hartley's NFL record for consecutive field goals made to start a career (16). The ball from Forbath's 17th consecutive made field goal to open his career now resides in Canton, Ohio, at the Pro Football Hall of Fame. In May, the kicking competition began in earnest when the team made Arkansas' Zach Hocker the first kicker drafted by Washington since taking Tennessee's John Hall in the sixth round of the 1999 NFL Draft.

The Redskins also created competition at punter, recruiting two new faces in third-year player Robert Malone and first-year UCF product Blake Clingan. All kicking and punting units are expected to utilize the services of long snapper Nick Sundberg, now in his fifth season with the Redskins.

Two of the team's most highly-anticipated position battles exist at the kick and punt returner positions. Crawford (see "Defensive Backs") became a key figure for Washington's special teams late in the 2012 season, totaling 156 yards on eight punt returns (19.5 avg.), and will attempt to regain that form after missing the 2013 season with an injury. Paul (see "Tight Ends") has a track record of kick returning that supplements his role as a punishing gunner in punt coverage. Thompson (see "Running Backs") returned for four games last season, but has attempted to rediscover the extra gear for which he was known at Florida State after battling injuries for the last several collegiate and professional seasons.

Washington's commitment to improving its special teams may be most evident in its new additions. Roberts (see "Wide Receivers"), who returned both kicks and punts for Arizona as a rookie in 2010, has expressed a desire to return both for the Redskins in 2014. Rookie Seast-runk (see "Running Backs") is hoping to translate the breakaway speed for which he was known at Baylor into Washington's return game. And, of course, Jackson (see "Wide Receivers") is responsible for one of the most infamous punt returns in recent history, a 65-yard game-winning touchdown in the "Miracle of the New Meadowlands" in 2010. In addition, the new additions of Hocker, Bolser (see "Tight Ends") and Hayward (see "Inside Linebackers") appeared to many to be a statement in the importance of kickoff coverage in 2014.

THE OPPONENT

Bill Belichick leads the New England Patriots into the 2014 preseason following a 12-4 campaign and an AFC East title in 2013. The Patriots earned a 43-22 win against the Indianapolis Colts in the AFC Divisional Round before falling to the Denver Broncos, 26-16, in the AFC Championship.

Quarterback Tom Brady, now entering his 15th NFL season, is expected to lead the Patriots' offense once again in 2014. Last season, Brady completed 380-of-628 passes (60.5 percent) for 4,343 yards with 25 touchdowns and 11 interceptions.

Running back Stevan Ridley returns after leading the Patriots in rushing in 2013. He compiled 773 yards on 178 carries (4.3 avg.) with seven rushing touchdowns. Ridley also added 10 receptions for 62 yards.

Wide receiver Julian Edelman led the Patriots in receiving a season ago, posting team highs in receptions (105), receiving yards (1,056) and receiving touchdowns (seven). Fellow receiver Danny Amendola contributed 54 receptions for 633 yards with two touchdowns. Rob Gronkowski led the Patriots' tight ends, gaining 592 yards on 39 catches with four touchdowns.

Linebacker Dont'a Hightower led the Patriots in tackles in 2013, compiling 97 tackles (55 solo), according to NFL GSIS, followed by defensive end Rob Ninkovich (91 tackles, 42 solo). Defensive end Chandler Jones led the Patriots in sacks a season ago with 11.5, followed by Ninkovich's eight. Cornerback Logan Ryan posted a team-high five interceptions.

Stephen Gostkowski handles kicking duties for New England and was 38-of-41 on field goal attempts last season (92.7 percent). Ryan Allen punted 76 times with a 45.9-yard average. A season ago, the now-departed LeGarrette Blount at kick returner led the team with 17 returns for 494 yards. Edelman handled punt returning duties, gaining 374 yards on 35 returns (10.7 avg.).

BILL BELICHICK

Bill Belichick is in his 40th season as an NFL coach with 20 seasons as a head coach (15 seasons for New England). He is fifth place all time with 218 total victories as a head coach. In 2013, Belichick passed Hall of Famer Chuck Noll for fifth place on the NFL wins list and his winning percentage of .657 ranks third in NFL history among coaches with 150 or more wins, trailing George Halas (.682) and Don Shula (.666).

He won more regular-season games (126) and more games overall (140) during a 10-year stretch (2003-2012) than any other head coach in NFL history. Belichick was hired by Patriots Chairman and CEO Robert Kraft on Jan. 27, 2000. In 14 of his 15 seasons, Belichick has delivered three Super Bowl championships, five conference titles, 11 division crowns and 18 playoff victories, while posting an overall record of 181-69. Belichick directed the Patriots to victories in Super Bowls XXXVI (2001), XXXVIII (2003) and XXXIX (2004), and in 2007 he became the only NFL head coach to guide his team to a 16-0 regular season.

From 2000-13, the Patriots won 72.8 percent of their regular-season games (163-61). In 2000, the Patriots held a 5-11 record. The team has earned a winning record each season since. Over a 100-game stretch from 2003-09, Belichick directed the team to an 81-19 record – tied for the best record in any 100-game span in NFL history. Since 2001, the Patriots lead the league with an 80-20 (.800) overall record in games played on Thanksgiving or later in the NFL season.

Belichick guided the Patriots to a league best 518 points scored in 2010, third in franchise history behind the NFL record 589 points in 2007 and seventh in NFL history. The Patriots went seven consecutive games without committing a turnover. The Patriots had 10 turnovers in 2010 (5 interceptions and 5 fumbles), setting an NFL record for fewest turnovers in a season.

In 2011, Belichick guided the Patriots to a 13-3 record, his fifth AFC Conference Championship and the team's ninth division title in 12 years. Belichick's five conference titles are tied with Tom Landry for the second most in NFL history during the Super Bowl era. The only head coach to bring his team to the Super Bowl more times than Belichick was Don Shula (6). The Patriots finished the 2011 season with 6,848 total net yards, which is fifth all-time in NFL history.

In 2012, Belichick became the eighth head coach in NFL history to record 200 victories. With a 12-4 regular-season record, he led New England to a winning record for 12 consecutive seasons (2001-2012).

Belichick has spent time sharing his experience and insight with high school coaches. In 2013, Belichick served as a guest speaker at the Notre Dame coaches clinic. In 2010, Belichick was the keynote speaker at Rutgers University's coaching clinic. In 2009, he addressed more than 500 Florida high school coaches at the Florida Gators Coaching Clinic. Belichick has also addressed high school coaches at USA Football's New England Coaching Camp and has spoken with Alabama high school coaches at the Alabama Coaching Clinic. Belichick was also a keynote speaker at the Frank McGuire Foundation's coaching seminar, addressing 600 New York-area high school coaches.

Belichick and his family established an annual scholarship awarded to an Annapolis High School senior for academic and athletic achievement. He was inducted into the school's Hall of Fame.

2014 DRAFT RECAP

The Washington Redskins finalized their 2014 NFL Draft class on Saturday, May 10, selecting eight total players.

NOTES ON THE REDSKINS' OVERALL DRAFT

- The Redskins made eight selections in the 2014 NFL Draft. The eight selections marked the third time in four years Washington has selected at least eight players (2011, 2012 and 2014).
- Washington selected 36 players in the past four drafts, the franchise's largest four-year total since the institution of the seven-round draft in 1994. The team last posted a four-year total of 36 across the 1991-94 NFL Drafts, a time frame which included two 12-round drafts, one eight-round draft and one seven-round draft.
- Washington made at least seven selections in four consecutive drafts for the first time since 1992-95.
- The Redskins selected two players in the seventh round, marking the sixth time in the last seven years that the team has drafted multiple players in the seventh round. Washington has made multiple seventh-round selections in each year from 2008 through 2014 with exception of the 2013 NFL Draft.
- Washington made two trades during the 2014 NFL Draft. On Friday, the team sent the No. 34 overall pick to the Dallas Cowboys in exchange for the Nos. 47 and 78 overall picks. On Saturday, Washington sent the No. 178 overall pick to the Tennessee Titans for the Nos. 186 and 228 overall selections.
- Washington selected four players with selections acquired by trade: LB Trent Murphy (No. 47 from Dallas), G Spencer Long (No. 78 from Dallas), RB Lache Seastrunk (No. 186 from Tennessee) and K Zach Hocker (No. 228 from Tennessee).
- Washington has selected 23 players with selections acquired by trade since 2010: FB/TE Dennis Morris (2010), WR Terrence Austin (2010), C Erik Cook (2010), T Selvish Capers (2010), LB Ryan Kerrigan (2011), WR Leonard Hankerson (2011), RB Roy Helu, Jr. (2011), S DeJon Gomes (2011), WR/TE Niles Paul (2011), WR Aldrick Robinson (2011), OL Maurice Hurt (2011), LB Markus White (2011), QB Robert Griffin III (2012), G Josh LeRibeus (2012), LB Keenan Robinson (2012), RB Alfred Morris (2012), T Tom Compton (2012), CB Jordan Bernstein (2012), LB Brandon Jenkins (2013), LB Trent Murphy (2014), G Spencer Long (2014), RB Lache Seastrunk (2014) and K Zach Hocker (2014).
- The 2014 NFL Draft marked the first time since 2010 that the Redskins had not selected college teammates in the same draft. Washington selected at least a pair of college teammates in each draft from 2011-13 (Nebraska's Roy Helu, Jr., DeJon Gomes and Niles Paul in 2011; SMU's Josh LeRibeus and Richard Crawford in 2012; Florida State's Chris Thompson and Brandon Jenkins in 2013).
- With the selection of Stanford's Trent Murphy, the Redskins made a product of the conference now known as the Pac-12 the team's top selection for the first time since selecting Stanford DB Duncan McColl with their top selection in the 1977 NFL Draft.

NOTES ON THE SELECTION OF TRENT MURPHY

- Murphy was the first selection of the Jay Gruden era and was the 35th selection by the Redskins since 2010.
- Murphy was the 432nd selection made by the Redskins in the Common Draft era (since 1967) and the 34th second-round selection in that time frame. He was the 52nd second-round selection by the Redskins all-time since the institution of the draft in 1936.
- The selection marked the third time the Redskins had taken a pass rusher with their first selection in the last six drafts (DE/LB Brian Orakpo in 2009 and LB Ryan Kerrigan in 2011).
- Including the selection of CB David Amerson with their initial pick last year, the Redskins selected a defensive player with their top pick in consecutive seasons for the first time since drafting S Sean Taylor, CB Carlos Rogers, LB Rocky McIntosh and S LaRon Landry with their first selections in the 2004-07 NFL Drafts.

- Murphy was the 15th Stanford product selected by the Redskins all-time, joining E Keith Topping (1936), B Bill Joslyn (1944), B Willard Sheller (1944), B Bill Shipkey (1945), C Jim McCurdy (1945), B Lynn Brownson (1947), B Bob Anderson (1948), B Bob Mathias (1953), E Sam Morley (1954), QB Don Bunce (1972), DE Duncan McColl (1977), G Brad Badger (1997), QB Todd Husak (2000) and LB Jarred Newberry (2005).
- Murphy was the sixth Stanford product selected by the Redskins in the Common Draft era (since 1967), tied for 11th-most by a single college in that timeframe.
- Murphy's selection at No. 47 marked the highest the Redskins had taken a Stanford product since selecting E Keith Topping with the No. 11 overall pick in the 1936 NFL Draft.
- With Murphy's selection, the Redskins used a second-round pick to draft a linebacker for the first time since selecting McIntosh in the second round (No. 35 overall) of the 2006 NFL Draft.
- Murphy was the third player selected by the Redskins at No. 47 all-time, joining T Larry Lutz (1936) and DE Shane Collins (1992).
- All three of Washington's all-time selections at No. 47 played collegiately in the conference now known as the Pac-12.
- Murphy was the first Pac-12 Conference player selected by the Redskins since selecting UCLA WR Terrence Austin in 2010. The two are the only Pac-12 products selected by the Redskins since 2010.

- Moses was the 433rd selection made by the Redskins in the Common Draft era (since 1967) and the 32nd third-round selection in that time frame. He was the 61st third-round selection by the Redskins all-time since the institution of the draft in 1936.
- The selection marked the earliest the Redskins had taken an offensive lineman since selecting two-time Pro Bowler Trent Williams with the fourth overall pick of the 2010 NFL Draft.
- Moses was the first player from the University of Virginia selected by the Redskins since the team picked G Jim Huddleston in the sixth round of the 1986 NFL Draft. The Redskins' last four selections from UVA have all been offensive linemen.

- Long was the 434th selection made by the Redskins in the Common Draft era and the 33rd third-round selection in that time frame. He was the 62nd third-round selection by the Redskins all-time since the institution of the draft in 1936.

DESEAN JACKSON

The Washington Redskins know first-hand what kind of playmaking ability wide receiver DeSean Jackson possesses. In six years as a Philadelphia Eagle, Jackson faced the Redskins 11 times, catching 32 passes for 572 yards (17.9 avg.) with five receiving touchdowns, his most receiving touchdowns against any opponent.

So when Jackson hit the free agent market on March 28, the Redskins were quick to act, signing the three-time Pro Bowler on April 2. Now the Redskins and first-year head coach Jay Gruden will set about finding ways to feature the dynamic seventh-year playmaker as part of its arsenal of weapons in 2014.

“You want to get people involved. That’s what the beauty of this offense hopefully is – being able to spread the ball around,” Gruden said during training camp. “We are able to get the running game involved, we are able to get Andre Roberts, DeSean and Pierre Garçon their touches and Robert [Griffin III] whatever he needs to do. Darrel Young, Jordan Reed, even [Logan] Paulsen, we’ve got to try to get everybody involved.”

Whereas Garçon, Jackson’s new teammate, turned heads in 2013 by amassing an NFL-leading and team-record-setting 113 receptions a season ago, it’s been Jackson’s explosiveness that has turned heads his entire career since entering the league in 2008. In the last six seasons, Jackson leads the NFL in receptions of 50-plus yards (22) and total touchdowns of 50-plus yards (17).

The duo of Garçon and Jackson produced the third- and fourth-most receiving yards in the NFC a season ago, combining for 2,678 receiving yards in 2013. With Garçon and Jackson comprising a one-two receiving punch among Washington’s array of offensive weapons for 2014, the question was posed to Jackson early in training camp: Will there be enough touches to keep everyone happy?

“I’m sure that’s the question everyone will want to know. Honestly, me and Andre [Roberts] were just talking about it earlier. It’s very dangerous and it’s very scary – I’d rather be on the team that has all the weapons,” Jackson said. “With me, Tana [Santana Moss], Pierre, J-Reed [Jordan Reed], Roberts, it’s so many options – Alfred Morris. There’s just so many options that regardless of how you play it... If somebody doesn’t get double teamed, another receiver is going to be open.”

“I’d rather be on the team with all the weapons.”

- Wide receiver DeSean Jackson in response to a question about if there are enough touches to keep all of Washington’s offensive threats happy

Jackson’s addition was called a “hand-in-glove” fit by Pro Bowl left tackle Trent Williams, and it’s how Jackson fits both with and without the ball that Gruden envisions helping the attack.

“Some days DeSean will have 10 catches for 200 yards. Maybe he will have two catches for eight yards. We don’t know how it’s going to play out, how the defenses are going to cover us,” Gruden said. “The coverage should dictate where the ball goes and hopefully with the weapons that we have, a certain guy can make a defense pay depending on how they are playing us.”

Jackson produced two games in excess of 190 receiving yards a season ago and joins the Redskins following a season in which he posted career highs in receptions (82) and receiving yards (1,332) and matched his career high in receiving touchdowns (nine). In light of such productive personal numbers a season ago, what expectations does Jackson have for himself in 2014?

“Honestly, man,” Jackson opined. “I just want to help my team win games.”

P.G.'S COUNTY

Prince George's County, Maryland — home to FedExField — quickly became Pierre Garçon's county in 2013. The receiver made himself at home in opposing secondaries in 2013 and produced one of the greatest receiving seasons in the Redskins' eight-decade history.

Washington signed Garçon on the first day of free agency during the 2012 offseason, believing his speed and tenacious on-field demeanor would add another dimension to the Redskins' offense. Garçon was a difference-maker during the team's NFC East title run in 2012, as the Redskins posted a 9-1 record with him in the lineup and were 1-5 with him sidelined.

Garçon amassed 113 receptions for 1,346 yards and five touchdowns in 2013. His 113 receptions broke Pro Football Hall of Famer Art Monk's 29-year-old team record for receptions in a season.

RECEPTIONS IN A SEASON (REDSKINS HISTORY):

Player	Year	Rec.	Yds.	TD
1. Pierre Garçon	2013	113	1,346	5
2. Art Monk	1984	106	1,372	7
3. Santana Moss	2010	93	1,115	6

The numbers were not buoyed by any outlier performances, as Garçon became only the third NFL player since the adoption of the 16-game schedule in 1978 to post at least five receptions in all 16 games of a season, joining Jacksonville's Jimmy Smith (2001) and Pittsburgh's Antonio Brown (2013).

Garçon led the league in receptions in 2013 and became the first Redskin since Monk in 1984 to finish a season atop the NFL in receptions.

NFL RECEPTIONS LEADERS (2013):

Player	Team	Rec	Yds	TD
1. Pierre Garçon	WAS	113	1,346	5
2. Antonio Brown	PIT	110	1,499	8
3. Andre Johnson	HOU	109	1,407	5
4. Julian Edelman	NE	105	1,056	6

Garçon's 1,346 receiving yards were the sixth-most in a season by a Redskin all-time and the most since Santana Moss' team record 1,483 yards in 2005.

RECEIVING YARDS IN A SEASON (REDSKINS HISTORY):

Player	Year	Rec.	Yds.	TD
1. Santana Moss	2005	84	1,483	9
2. Bobby Mitchell	1963	69	1,436	7
3. Henry Ellard	1994	74	1,397	6
4. Bobby Mitchell	1962	72	1,384	11
5. Art Monk	1984	106	1,372	7
6. Pierre Garçon	2013	113	1,346	5

Garçon's numbers and his acrobatic highlight-reel catches were worthy of attention, but the Redskins' coaching staff also tried to draw attention to what Garçon — a ferocious perimeter blocker — did for Washington's prolific rushing attack in 2013.

Garçon has made great strides to make sure his impact transcends the football field. In the 2013 offseason, Garçon hosted an event that raised more than $30,000 for the Boys & Girls Club of Greater Washington. In 2014, his second annual event raised more than $100,000.

"We're just coming together to help support the [organization]," he told The Washington Post. "I grew up in a similar atmosphere, and if we can help kids grow, and keep them out of trouble from the time they get out of the classroom, and especially in the summertime... We're just trying

"I'm not surprised that he would develop into the go-to guy in Washington. When they signed him there, that's what they wanted, and that's what they're getting."

- Pro Football Hall of Famer Cris Carter,
as told to Mike Jones of The Washington Post to raise money to help them out, keep their doors open so more kids can benefit from it."

In addition, Garçon helped donate new football jerseys to one high school in Washington, D.C., one in Virginia and one in Maryland. The gesture was personal for the Division III Mount Union product.

"It just makes me happy that I could help out, especially in high school, where for kids, it's a big moment in their lives," Garçon told The Washington Post. "Having nice uniforms could make you play a little bit better and hopefully help you earn a scholarship to play Division I football, and that goes a long way between playing Division I instead of Division III, not having to pay your loans and all that."

During the 2014 offseason, Garçon's off-field efforts carried him overseas, as he joined Saints tight end Jimmy Graham and Dolphins punter Brandon Fields on a USO tour of U.S. military bases in Afghanistan and the United Arab Emirates in March.

HOMECOMING FOR RYAN CLARK

Ryan Clark spent two years with the Washington Redskins from 2004-05, helping patrol a secondary that guided the Redskins to a playoff berth and Wild Card round victory in his last season in D.C.

Now 34, Clark returns to the Redskins with a Super Bowl ring and a Pro Bowl selection to his name. Immediately after his signing in early April, observers noted the leadership he could provide the team's young corps of defensive backs, and Clark has a theory why his name and the term "leadership" are so often found adjacent to one another these days.

"I get talked to a lot about leadership," Clark said during training camp. "I'm just old."

The line drew laughs, but it's the way the former college free agent from LSU now entering the 13th season of his decorated NFL career can lead by example that could prove most valuable to the Redskins' secondary in 2014.

"I'm not like, 'Hey, you have got to do it this way,' or 'You've got to do it that way,'" Clark said. "I think that falls on guys after you've played for such a long time, but for me, we're all the same group. We're all brothers. We're all trying to figure out how we can win games."

Clark is expected to be more than just a teacher in his second tenure in Washington. He joined the Redskins having previously appeared in 161 regular season games with 137 starts, compiling 807 tackles (562 solo), 52 passes defensed, 15 interceptions, five forced fumbles, six fumbles recovered and 3.5 sacks. He spent eight years in Pittsburgh from 2006-13 and played in 92 of a possible 96 regular season games from 2008-13 and helped the Steelers to two Super Bowl appearances in that time frame, including a 27-23 victory in Super Bowl XLIII.

The Marrero, La. native earned his first career Pro Bowl selection following the 2011 season, a season in which he started all 16 games of the Steelers' 12-4 campaign. One season later, he was named the Steelers' 2012 Walter Payton Man of the Year for his off-the-field community service as well his on-field performance.

Fans and observers may do a double take when seeing Clark in the Redskins' secondary on the practice field, but not simply just because of his return. Though Clark will wear No. 25 on Sundays, the former teammate of the late Sean Taylor has continued his tradition of wearing No. 21 in Taylor's honor during practices.

"Every time somebody asks me why I wear a different number to practice, I get to tell Sean's story. I get to tell people about the guy I love. I get to tell people about the guy who was possibly on his way to being the greatest safety to ever play the game. And that got cut short. He never got to realize his full potential. But it gives me the opportunity to remind people of him."

- Safety Ryan Clark to 106.7 The Fan on why he wears No. 21 in practice

The No. 21 represents a solemn moment of reflection for the normally gregarious Clark, who spent part of his offseason as an analyst for ESPN. Given his outgoing personality and the trend of nicknamed secondaries in the NFL, a reporter asked Clark if he cared to nickname Washington's secondary.

"No, we have no nicknames. All of that stuff is cute but I don't care about that, you know what I mean?" Clark said during training camp. "We just want to win. If by the end of the season you could say the secondary for the Washington Redskins were winners, I think we'll take that. That would be the most important thing."

D-HALL TAKES CHARGE

For years, Washington's defense didn't have to search hard for a leader. Middle linebacker London Fletcher took command in the huddle and in the locker room, but following Fletcher's retirement after the 2013 season, the unit found itself in need of a unifying voice.

Enter DeAngelo Hall.

The 30-year-old playmaker at cornerback now in his 11th year has made a career of matching up one-on-one with top receivers and coming up with game-changing plays. The never-shy and often-brash Virginia Tech product seems ready to take the mantle of leadership.

"It's going to be the first camp in a long time that I haven't had a guy like Fletch around, so definitely the onus is on me," Hall said early in training camp. "Meeting with Jay [Gruden] this offseason he kind of stressed that to me and I embraced it. I felt like I was ready for it. London, I tried to stay in his hip pocket as much as possible, so I'm definitely up for the challenge. I understand it's not about me, it's about this team."

Hall has been among the top playmaking cornerbacks in the league since joining the Redskins in 2008. He has played 84 regular season games with the Redskins with 79 starts, registering 436 tackles (according to STATS, LLC), 23 interceptions, seven fumbles recovered, six fumbles forced and a sack. His 23 interceptions since joining the Redskins on Nov. 7, 2008 are tied for the third-most in the NFL in that time frame.

INTERCEPTIONS BY NFL PLAYERS SINCE HALL JOINED THE REDSKINS (NOV. 7, 2008):

Rank	Player	Team(s)	INT
1	Ed Reed	BAL/HOU/NYJ	29
2	Asante Samuel	PHI/ATL	26
3t	DeAngelo Hall	WAS	23
3t	Charles Woodson	GB/OAK	23
5	Jarius Byrd	BUF/NO	22

After an offseason in which Hall publicly addressed his place among active cornerbacks, Hall set out in training camp to clarify his beliefs about the respect he believes his body of work should garner.

"As a corner if you don't feel like you're the best, you've got a problem right there. I never said I was the best, I would be a fool to think 11 years in I'm the best in the game right now," Hall noted. "I definitely think I'm pretty successful at doing what I do. Like I said, man, if you really watch film, let's go watch film and I put my film against any corner in the league and we'll see what he does and we'll see what I do and we can go from there. I definitely think that if you put me out there against a receiver, anyone of them, I'll take my chances. I never said I was the best, but I definitely feel like I should be in the conversation."

The comments displayed the matured and refined Hall, who has grown considerably from the player who was perceived as selfish entering the league at 20 years of age. It's the new Hall that new coach Jay Gruden has come to value as both a player and as a locker room presence.

"I did hear about DeAngelo Hall a little bit, some of the reputation, some of the things that happened, the attitude that he has. But as a cornerback, you kind of want some of that attitude, that cockiness, that confident air about you as long as it doesn't affect your play," Gruden said. "He's proven the last few years that it doesn't affect his play and I think he's calmed down a little bit. He knows what being a pro is all about... We're happy with his leadership role and his accountability right now."

Hall hopes to continue making a run at record books this season. His 23 interceptions as a Redskin rank 10th in team history. Last season, he scored a team-record three defensive touchdowns. Hall became only the second player in NFL history with at least four interception return touchdowns and four fumble return touchdowns in a career, joining former cornerback Ronde Barber.

GROUND AND POUND

Washington's rushing attack was a point of pride during the 2012 season as the Redskins posted a team-record 2,709 rushing yards. In 2013, the Redskins' ground game was reminiscent of the 2012 attack that earned Washington its first NFL team rushing crown since 1933. The Redskins posted a Top 5 finish in rushing yardage in consecutive years for the first time since doing so in three consecutive seasons from 1983-85.

RUSHING YARDS (NFL, 2013):

4. Seattle Seahawks	2,188	509	4.3	14
5. Washington Redskins	2,164	453	4.8	14

The attack was particularly strong after the season's quarter pole, as the Redskins amassed an NFL-high 1,740 yards since returning from their Week 5 bye week, 107 yards more than the next best team (Philadelphia — 1,633).

The Redskins rushed for exactly 209 yards twice in Weeks 7 and 9 in 2013. The team did so in a 45-41 win vs. Chicago, breaking the 200-yard rushing mark in consecutive games for the first time since Weeks 4-5 of the 1984 season. They added another 209-yard effort in Week 9 vs. San Diego.

Washington had seven 200-yard rushing games across the 2012-13 seasons, tied for the most in the NFL in that span.

3. Washington Redskins	453	2,164	4.78
4. Green Bay Packers	459	2,136	4.65

Including Washington's team-record 2,709 rushing yards from 2012, the Redskins' 2,164-yard effort in 2013 gave Washington 2,000 rushing yards in consecutive seasons for the first time since 2005-06. It marked the eighth time the Redskins had posted consecutive 2,000-yard rushing seasons (1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1990-91, 2005-06, 2012-13).

The 2013 Redskins' 2,000-yard rushing season was the 22nd in team history, and the 2013 squad's 2,164 yards rank as the ninth-most in a season in franchise annals.

A.M.-TRAK

Away from football, running back Alfred Morris might be best known for his beloved car — a 1991 Mazda 626 he affectionately names “Bentley.” Mazda volunteered 275 hours of work over four months to restore Morris’ famous ride, which he bought from his pastor for $2 in college.

It’s been Morris himself that’s run like an old classic since he entered the league in 2012. Morris was one of the engines that drove the Redskins to their first team rushing title since 1933 in 2012. Morris ranked third in the NFC and fourth in the NFL in rushing yardage in 2013.

MOST RUSHING YARDS (NFL, 2013):

Player	Team	Yards	Att.	Avg.
1. LeSean McCoy	PHI	314	1,607	5.12

4. Alfred Morris	WAS	276	1,275	4.62
5. Adrian Peterson	MIN	279	1,266	4.54

Morris was one of seven backs to post 1,000 rushing yards in both 2012 and 2013 and is one of only four to exceed 1,250 yards in both season. Morris’ 2,888 rushing yards since 2012 are second-most in the league, and he can boast the most 70-yard rushing games in that time frame.

MOST RUSHING YARDS SINCE 2012 (NFL):

Player	Team	70-Yard Games
1. Alfred Morris	WAS	25
2. Marshawn Lynch	SEA	24
3. Adrian Peterson	MIN	23

Morris’ success in 2013 came after a 2012 rookie season in which he blossomed from an overlooked sixth-round pick to the team’s new record-holder for rushing yards in a season. His performance was the third-most prolific by a rookie in league history.

2. George Rogers	1981 Saints	1,674
3. Alfred Morris	2012 Redskins	1,613
4. Ottis Anderson	1979 Cardinals	1,605

Morris amassed the most yardage of any Redskin in his first two NFL seasons.

1. Alfred Morris	2012-13	2,888

Morris’ 2,888 rushing yards from 2012-13 rank ninth-most in NFL history among players in their first two seasons. In Week 11, Morris became only the 16th back in NFL history to reach 2,500 rushing yards in his first two seasons. The list includes five Pro Football Hall of Famers: Eric Dickerson (3,913), Earl Campbell (3,147), Barry Sanders (2,774), Curtis Martin (2,639) and Emmitt Smith (2,500).

RAK ATTACK

In the midst of their NFC East title run in 2012, the Redskins found themselves without the services of linebacker Brian Orakpo for the team's final 14 games of the season after a torn pectoral muscle ended his season in Week 2. Orakpo's recovery and return was one of the defining storylines during the 2013 offseason.

Orakpo's renaissance season in 2013 was a resounding success. The Houston native started 15 games for Washington, missing only the team's finale, and earned his third career Pro Bowl selection after he was credited with 70 tackles by the coaching staff while accumulating 10.0 sacks, four passes defended, two fumble recoveries and an interception, which he returned for a touchdown.

The man known simply as "Rak" entered the season needing half a sack to reach the career 30-sack milestone, a plateau which he made distant in the linebacker's rearview mirror. He surpassed the 30-sack mark with a sack at Green Bay in Week 2 and posted another nine sacks in the 12 games that followed. With 1.5 sacks at Atlanta in Week 15, Orakpo reached 10.0 sacks for the season, marking the first time he had posted double-digit sacks in a season since setting a Redskins rookie record with 11.0 sacks in his debut season in 2009.

In 2013, Orakpo passed Dave Butz (35.5) and Andre Carter (34.0) on the team's all-time sack list and currently sits fifth in franchise history with 39.5 sacks.

CAREER SACKS (TOP 10, REDSKINS HISTORY SINCE 1982):

Player	Seasons	Sacks
1. Dexter Manley	1982-89 (8)	91.0
2. Charles Mann	1983-93 (11)	82.0
3. Monte Coleman	1979-94 (16)	43.5
4. Ken Harvey	1994-98 (5)	41.5
5. Brian Orakpo	2009-13 (5)	39.5
6. Dave Butz	1982-88 (7)	35.5
7. Andre Carter	2006-10 (5)	34.0
8. Bruce Smith	2000-03 (4)	29.0
9. Darryl Grant	1982-90 (9)	27.0
10t. Ryan Kerrigan	2011-13 (3)	24.5
10t. Wilber Marshall	1988-92 (5)	24.5

The former Texas Longhorn has been adept at getting his hands on quarterbacks throughout his entire football life, but in Week 7, Orakpo had his first experience getting his hands on a pass. In the second quarter of Washington's win over the Chicago Bears, Orakpo intercepted quarterback Jay Cutler and returned the pick 29 yards for a touchdown. The interception and the defensive touchdown were both career firsts for Orakpo, and according to Orakpo, the interception was the first of his life at any level.

As with any 3-4 outside linebacker in today's NFL, Orakpo is judged primarily on his pass rush, but Defensive Coordinator Jim Haslett has gone out of his way in recent years to credit Orakpo for his role in the run game.

"He's violent in the run game. I think he's coming around and looked like the Rak of old," Haslett said. "I think Rak is good on the run. You know the No. 1 criteria for outside linebacker is obviously pass rusher. No. 2 is you've got to be able to handle a tight end, beat up a tight end. I think him and Ryan [Kerrigan] are excellent in both of those."

In addition to his pass rush prowess and his ability against the run, in the 2014 offseason, new Outside Linebackers Coach Brian Baker praised an underrated aspect of Orakpo's game.

"They are the best covering outside linebackers in this league," Baker said of Orakpo and Kerrigan during minicamp. "I was shocked when I studied film to take the job how good those guys are in coverage... In coverage, those guys are ridiculous. In coverage, I'm not messing those two dudes up at all. They are fantastic, both of them."

2013 SEASON HIGHLIGHTS

Week 4 at Raiders: Recorded two sacks in Oakland, giving him six career sacks in two games played O.co Coliseum.

Week 7 vs. Bears: Came away with the first interception of his entire football career (amateur or professional) and returned it 29 yards for a touchdown.

Week 11 at Eagles: Added 1.5 sacks of Nick Foles to pass Andre Carter (34.0) for sixth on the Redskins' all-time sack list.

DEFENSIVE TOUCHDOWNS

The Redskins instituted the 3-4 defense prior to the 2010 season with the directive of forcing turnovers and creating game-changing plays. Early in the 2013 season, the defense turned five turnovers into points of their own. With two interception returns for touchdowns by DeAngelo Hall, one interception return by David Amerson and Brian Orakpo and a fumble return for touchdown by Hall, the Redskins finished 2013 ranking tied for third in the NFL and tied for second in the NFC with five defensive scores.

NFL DEFENSIVE TOUCHDOWNS (2013):

1. Kansas City Chiefs	7	5	2
2. Chicago Bears	6	5	1
3t. Washington Redskins	5	4	1
3t. Five others tied	5

The Redskins' 2013 defensive point assault was led by cornerback DeAngelo Hall, whose three defensive touchdowns were a Redskins record. The 2013 Redskins fell one defensive score shy of posting a team-record-tying six defensive touchdowns in a season for the first time since 1984. That season, Washington received defensive scores from Vernon Dean (two interception returns), Monte Coleman (interception return), Darrell Green (interception return), Darryl Grant (fumble return) and Curtis Jordan (fumble return).

1t. 1973 Redskins	6	4	2
1t. 1971 Redskins	6	5	1
4t. 2012 Redskins	5	4	1

Washington's defensive touchdowns have been a trend dating back to last season, when the team scored three touchdowns on interception returns and added another via fumble return. The Redskins' nine defensive touchdowns since 2012 are third most in the NFL in that time frame, trailing only Chicago (15) and St. Louis (10).

JORDAN REED

Despite having three tight ends on the roster with at least six starts in burgundy and gold, Washington opted to add another tight end to the fold in the 2013 NFL Draft when it selected Florida's Jordan Reed in the third round (85th overall). Despite only playing nine games as a rookie, Reed emerged as one of the offense's most difficult matchups for opponents.

Reed's 45 receptions and 499 receiving yards in his rookie season were the most by a rookie tight end in a season in Redskins history.

1. Jordan Reed	2013	499	45	2
2. Stephen Alexander	1998	383	37	4
3. Chris Cooley	2004	314	37	6

Furthermore, despite missing a game and a half with injuries in the first 10 games of the 2013 season, Reed's 45 receptions were the most by a Redskins rookie at any position through the team's first 10 games of a season in team history.

RECEPTIONS BY REDSKINS ROOKIES (FIRST 10 GAMES OF A SEASON):

In Week 7 last year, Reed set career highs in receptions (nine) and receiving yards (134) in Washington's 45-41 win against Chicago and caught his second career touchdown. Reed's 134 yards set the Redskins' mark for receiving yards in a game by a rookie tight end. The record was previously held by Redskins great Jerry Smith, who registered 78 receiving yards on six catches vs. Dallas on Nov. 28, 1965. His 134 yards were the fourth-most in a game by a Redskins tight end of any experience level.

Reed's 134 receiving yards were the most by a Redskins rookie since wide receiver Rod Gardner's 208-yard effort vs. Carolina on Oct. 21, 2001. Reed was targeted nine times against Chicago and caught all nine passes. In records available starting in 1991, Reed was the first Redskin to be targeted at least nine times and catch every pass.

UNSUNG HERO

Darrel Young entered the NFL as a college free agent linebacker out of Villanova in 2009. One position change and two head coaching changes later, Young has found a home as one of the league's most dynamic fullbacks.

A favorite of teammates, fans, coaches and media members alike, there was consternation in the 2014 off-season about whether or not new coach Jay Gruden — who did not prominently feature a fullback as Offensive Coordinator of the Cincinnati Bengals — would have a significant role for Young. That question was laid to rest early in training camp.

"I didn't have Darrel Young in Cincinnati — if I had him, I would have used him," Gruden said. "He's very versatile, he can run, he can catch, so we're excited about having him... The personnel will vary but DY will be a major part of this offense."

"I didn't have Darrel Young in Cincinnati. If I had him, I would have used him."

- Head Coach Jay Gruden during training camp, discussing his limited usage of fullbacks while Offensive Coordinator for the Cincinnati Bengals

In Week 9 last season, Young helped the Redskins to an overtime win against the San Diego Chargers, receiving five carries for 12 yards and three rushing touchdowns, including a 4-yard walk-off touchdown in overtime. The three touchdowns were a single-game career high for Young. Young had entered the game with only one career rushing touchdown to his credit — a six-yard score against the New York Giants on Dec. 18, 2011. He added a career-long 62-yard touchdown reception two weeks later at Philadelphia.

As a blocker, Young has helped pave the way for a rushing attack that gained a league-high 4,873 rushing yards on 972 carries across the 2012-13 seasons. Among the beneficiaries of Young's blocks is Alfred Morris, who ranked fourth in the NFL in rushing in 2013 and whose 2,888 rushing yards from 2012-13 rank ninth-most in NFL history among players in their first two seasons.

Young was a crucial component of the Redskins' league-high 2,709 rushing yards in 2012, which broke the team record of 2,625 set in 1983. The team broke the 200-yard rushing mark four times in 2012, tied for the most in a season in team history since the 1970 merger. With Young, the Redskins surpassed the 200-yard rushing plateau three times in 2013 as well.

Though Young continues to adapt and thrive in his unsung hero role in Washington's offense, the "hero" label is nothing new to the Young family. Young was raised in a military family, as his father served in the Army and his brother, Sgt. 1st Class David Young Jr., has completed several tours in the Middle East in recent years. Young has travelled overseas to visit troops in order to show his appreciation for members of the military and has repeatedly been supportive of all members of the military.

"I just run 100 yards and tackle people, hit people, block people. He's out there to serve the country. He's the real hero in my life."

- Fullback Darrel Young discussing his brother, Sgt. 1st Class David Young Jr., on ESPN's Sunday NFL Countdown (segment screenshots on right)

The mentality of sacrifice and hard work that was ingrained in Young while growing up in a military family established the foundation for his success doing football's so-called "dirty work" both as a fullback and as one of the Redskins' leaders on special teams.

Head Coach Jay Gruden

Jay Gruden's winding path to becoming Washington Redskins head coach

By Dave Sheinin
The Washington Post
Jan. 9, 2014

There is one lonely branch of the vaunted West Coast Offense coaching tree — the one the great Bill Walsh sent rising from the ground decades ago — that is twisted and gnarled, and that loops back around on itself, as if bent by an unnatural force. But this branch, while strange-looking, is thriving and sturdy and, though others have withered and died, continues its climb towards the sun.

The branch is Jay Gruden.

With the Washington Redskins naming Gruden, until now the Cincinnati Bengals' offensive coordinator, as their new head coach Thursday, it completes a remarkable coaching journey that is perhaps unlike any in NFL history — unless you can name another who has played and/or coached in the World League of American Football, the Arena Football League and the United Football League, who has drawn paychecks from professional teams called the Dragons, the Surge, the Storm, the Kats, the Predators and the Tuskers.

If those minor-league teams — from places ranging from Barcelona to Sacramento to Orlando — don't ring a bell, then surely the last name does. Gruden is the younger brother, as well as a protégé of sorts, of Monday Night Football analyst Jon Gruden, former Super Bowl-winning head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. Jay, now 46, spent seven seasons on Jon's Tampa Bay staff, several of them connected to his brother via headset from the press box, one segment of a football education that has been a lifetime in the making.

"Jay's starting point is within that West Coast tree," said University of Pittsburgh quarterbacks coach Brooks Bollinger, who played two seasons under Jay Gruden with the UFL's Florida Tuskers. "His terminology and play design were similar to Jon's. I think it would be wrong to say he got it all from Jon, but that was his starting point. No question the foundation of who he was from an offensive-philosophy standpoint was similar to Jon. He's definitely a West Coast [offense] guy."

Jay Gruden's professional career path may have more twists and turns than most, but his pedigree is pure football. His father, Jim, was a longtime coach and scout at the high school, collegiate and NFL levels. The three Gruden boys — Jim Jr., Jon and Jay — were all born in Ohio, as Jim Sr. went from Fremont High School to Heidelberg College, two stops on a lengthy coaching resume.

Jay, the youngest, was the best athlete of the bunch — better than Jon, whose playing career ended at the University of Dayton, and Jim Jr., who became a doctor. He played four seasons under Howard Schnellenberger at Louisville, throwing for 7,024 career yards and leading the Cardinals to an 8-3 season as a senior in 1988, the program's first winning season in a decade. Schnellenberger gave his quarterbacks extraordinary leeway to call audibles, and Gruden was one of his best pupils.

"He had the final say, really, when he got out there and saw the defense, after the coaches had put together the plan," Schnellenberger told the Bengals' Web site in 2011.

While Jon eventually became one of the most recognizable faces in professional football — his intensity and twisted facial expressions earning him the nickname “Chuckie” — Jay, following his collegiate career, toiled away in obscurity in football’s minor leagues. But he won everywhere he went.

In the Arena League, he won six championships as a player or coach. When Jon got the Tampa Bay head coaching job in 2002, he invited Jay to join his staff, and for a number of years, the latter double-dipped — working for the Buccaneers from July to January, then moving down I-4 to work for the AFL’s Orlando Predators. For the first two seasons, he was simultaneously an NFL assistant coach and an AFL quarterback, before retiring from playing in 2004.

With the smaller playing field and hectic pace of the Arena League, Gruden became adept at creating space for his quarterbacks, while emphasizing quick decision-making — attributes he continued to emphasize even as he moved on to “the outdoor game.”

“You can see a direct correlation between his time in the Arena League and what he’s been able to do in the NFL,” Bollinger said. “Guys who have been in that world have an easier time looking outside the box.”

His Florida-centric life also allowed Jay Gruden to be a constant presence at home for his three sons. And when Jon was fired from Tampa Bay in 2008, and shortly thereafter the Arena League went on an extended hiatus, Jay latched on as offensive coordinator with the Florida Tuskers of the fledgling UFL — hired by then-head coach Jim Haslett — and assumed the head coaching job when Haslett left to be the Redskins’ defensive coordinator. In both seasons, the Tuskers played in the UFL title game. And in a delicious twist, Haslett will now be on Gruden’s staff in Washington.

“The guy is amazing and very intelligent,” Haslett told the Orlando Sentinel in 2009. Speaking of Jon and Jay, Haslett said, “They’re so much alike, it’s unbelievable.”

But a more knowledgeable source on the personalities of the Gruden brothers — their father, Jim Sr. — disagrees.

“Jon is the more emotional guy,” said Jim Gruden Sr., in a telephone interview. “Jay is more laid back. I’ve seen him lose his cool, of course. But Jon can flip the switch on in a second — Jay’s not like that. He doesn’t fly off the handle. He’s kind of a different dude from Jon.”

One other way the Gruden brothers are different: unlike Jon, Jay was never a cut-throat career-climber who needed to be in the NFL at all costs.

“It was never a goal of his until the year the Arena League folded,” Jim Gruden Sr. said. “He was never a guy who was a climber. He was happy where he was. But things change in life. His kids were getting to be college-age. You could see Jay was starting to think more about the NFL.”

His hiring in Cincinnati in 2011, as offensive coordinator on Marvin Lewis’s Bengals staff, coincided with the drafting of quarterback Andy Dalton and wide receiver A.J. Green. In each of their first three seasons, the Bengals made the AFC playoffs, but lost in the first round, including a 27-10 defeat at home to San Diego on Sunday. In Gruden’s three seasons there, the Bengals’ offense has risen from 18th to 12th to sixth in the NFL in points per game, gaining him a reputation as one of the game’s top young offensive minds.

“We are much simpler in our scheme for the quarterback since Jay has come on board,” Lewis told the Bengals’ Web site. “We are not reinventing the wheel against every new defense we face. The quarterback has a lot of leeway in the things he can call, and Jay has recognized that Andy was the type of player who could use those options effectively.”

By the end of the 2012 season, Gruden had been asked to interview for four NFL head coaching jobs. When none panned out, Gruden simply went back to Cincinnati and won another division title. If his career has proven anything, it is that opportunity will come when it is ready to come, and no sooner.

New Redskins coach: Quiet intensity, offensive creativity, relentless work ethic

By Nathan Fenno

Almost three decades haven’t removed the moment from Howard Schnellenberger’s mind.

On the final play of Jay Gruden’s sophomore season at the University of Louisville in 1986, a Florida State defensive lineman twisted the quarterback’s left leg into an unnatural position. Gruden’s anterior cruciate ligament and medial collateral ligament were torn.

“I thought they tore it all the way off,” said Schnellenberger, Louisville’s head coach at the time. “I didn’t think he’d ever play again. But he came back.”

The injury is part of an unorthodox path taken by Gruden that led to Thursday afternoon’s press conference at Redskins Park where he was introduced as the troubled franchise’s new head coach.

The same traits of tenacity and toughness that Schnellenberger believed helped Gruden, 46, return from the knee injury will be needed as he takes charge of a team coming off a tumultuous 3-13 season. He is the eighth — and youngest — head coach hired by the Redskins since Daniel Snyder purchased the team in 1999.

“He’s one of my favorites because he’s an overachiever,” Schnellenberger said. “He’s a driven person.”

That attitude helped carry Gruden, the son of a former college coach and NFL scout, on a winding journey through professional football’s hinterlands. In the pass-happy Arena Football League played on 50-yard fields, he won four championships as a player with the Tampa Bay Storm, then two more as a head coach of the Orlando Predators. The league’s hall of fame, where he was inducted in 1999, dubbed him “the AFL’s own version of John Elway.” One Florida newspaper described Gruden as the “Michael Jordan” of the AFL.

The accolades didn’t diminish the sting from an NFL playing career that never happened.

“I never understood why I never got an opportunity, but I’m still a little bitter over that,” Gruden told the Orlando Sentinel in 2006.

When Gruden’s elder brother, Jon, coached the Buccaneers from 2002 to 2008, he came along as an offensive assistant and continued his football education before they were fired in 2008.

Attention has never been in short supply for the elder brother after coaching the Buccaneers to a win in the Super Bowl in 2003 and, these days, as an analyst on ESPN's Monday Night Football broadcasts whose name regularly pops up in coaching rumors. But in the relative anonymity of little-known football leagues and the dusty corners of an NFL staff, the younger brother crafted a reputation for quiet intensity, offensive creativity and a relentless work ethic that made him the first one to hit the weight room or to study film each morning.

"Jay, it takes a little longer for him to get pissed off," his father, Jim, said from the family's home in Tampa, Fla. "It can happen to Jon real fast."

Added Schnellenberger: "Jon is gregarious, outgoing. He's a music man. He's an entertainer. Jay is not that. He's down to earth and doesn't use more words than he needs to use to get his opinions and thoughts across. His father was a very laid-back guy. Jay takes a lot after him."

The journey to Washington hasn't been without bumps. Gruden spent the past three seasons as offensive coordinator for the Bengals. Their season ended Jan. 5 with a 27-10 loss to the Chargers in the wild-card round of the playoffs that continued a string of postseason failures.

Questions followed Gruden's play-calling. Bengals quarterback Andy Dalton turned over the ball three times in the second half and Gruden called for 31 passes in the fourth quarter, despite preaching a balanced attack of runs and passes.

"Sometimes, maybe, I give coordinators too much credit like, 'OK, this play worked a couple times, no way it's going to work again,'" Gruden told Cincinnati radio station ESPN 1530. "You outthink yourself, and that's the whole thing you go through as a coordinator is how to attack."

Gruden also earned national notoriety for a profane rant captured by the HBO reality series "Hard Knocks" during Bengals training camp in August. After what he believed to be a poor practice, the coordinator invoked the name of a popular cartoon mouse before descending into a bleep-filled tirade that included his disinclination to coach a .500 team and a desire for further attention to detail.

Despite the glitches, he has interviewed for at least six other NFL head coaching jobs since he was hired by the Bengals.

Gruden's approach has led to success outside the video-game world of the AFL. With the Florida Tuskers of the upstart United Football League in 2009, for instance, he helped quarterback Brooks Bollinger earn the league's most valuable player award.

"Part of why I felt comfortable as a quarterback was not only what he could teach me just at my position, but how he made everything else flow together," Bollinger said. "I think his ability to do that with the offense — you know, to get guys in the right places and make concepts match up and all the personalities you have to manage at the other position — I think his understanding of that helps the quarterback have success and feel very comfortable."

Jim Haslett, the Redskins' defensive coordinator the past four seasons, hired Gruden as his offensive coordinator with the Tuskers. He then succeeded Haslett as head coach when Haslett left to join Mike Shanahan's staff as defensive coordinator in Washington in 2010.

Former Redskins quarterback Joe Theismann was part of the Tuskers' ownership group and interacted with Gruden on a regular basis.

"I watched the way he worked, watched the way he communicated with players, watched the way players responded to working for him," Theismann said. "Everything was really positive."

The tight-knit connections around the hire don't end there. Redskins general manager Bruce Allen held the same position with the Buccaneers from 2004 to 2008 before he and the Grudens were fired. Allen led the coaching search after Shanahan was fired and sat next to Gruden during Thursday's press conference. The new coach had a five-year contract and tried to push beyond the troubles that led the Redskins to losing records in seven of the past 11 seasons.

"He's very stoic, a lot more outgoing now [than in college], when he was a man of few words," Schnellenberger said. "The smile is on his face all the time."

A smile that won't soon fade.

First-year coach Jay Gruden has Redskins thinking quick turnaround

By Don Banks

June 12, 2014

ASHBURN, Va. -- The honeymoon months are always fun and filled with promise for a first-time NFL head coach, in that blank-slate, anything-is-possible sort of way. But soon enough, we'll begin to find out if Jay Gruden and his new-look Redskins resemble the club that took the NFL by surprise in 2012, storming to an NFC East title, or the team that bottomed out in dysfunctional fashion in 2013, posting Washington's worst record (3-13) since the dawn of the Norv Turner era in 1994.

In overview, that is the key question: Which version was the real Redskins? And while we're at it, which incarnation of quarterback Robert Griffin III will we see in 2014 under Gruden, given that the arc of Griffin's first two years in the NFL so clearly mirrored the fortunes of the franchise? Somewhere in between is my hunch, but Gruden knows there's no upside to using the past two wildly divergent seasons in Washington as any meaningful measuring stick. Whatever the story of this year's Redskins turns out to be, it will only reveal itself in due time.

"I try to forget what happened here both in '12 and '13," Gruden said, talking in the moments after his team's OTA workout Wednesday afternoon at Redskins Park. "We just want to make it look like '14 around here. It's a whole new season, with brand new challenges ahead. We can't even think about the last two years. Things were learned from what happened in '12 and '13, from the growing process as far as a young quarterback is concerned. But I feel confident in Robert's abilities, and who wouldn't? He's a confident kid."

"If he has a problem right now, a negative, it's he wants every play to work. Sometimes he might throw a ball into coverage when he shouldn't, especially out here (in offseason workouts). But when you've got the live bullets flying around (during the season) and he's got the ability to run, I think you'll see more of the element where he's willing to just get what he can get out of a play and live to fight another day. Out here he's trying to make every play, but I've been really thrilled with what he's done so far."

Gruden is wearing Redskins colors in large part, of course, because he's a quarterback-minded coach, hired by a team that has a franchise quarterback already facing something of a crossroads season in the third year of his career. The former Bengals offensive coordinator and ex-collegiate and Arena League quarterback sees the game from the QB position, and his challenge is to fully develop Griffin's gifts and perhaps undo any of the damage done by the quarterback's January 2013 knee injury and the upheaval of last season, when the trust and relationship between Griffin and former Washington head coach Mike Shanahan (and offensive coordinator Kyle Shanahan) completely deteriorated.

How Griffin's game matures under Gruden's touch will be the intriguing backdrop to Washington's 2014 season. Gruden's challenge is to take some of what Griffin did so brilliantly as a rookie in 2012 and find a way to use his unique athletic skills within a style of play that is sustainable health-wise. The way to read that may be that Griffin's read option days aren't completely over, but under Gruden, it'll never be 2012 again.

"Personally my belief is the read option is better as an element of surprise," Gruden said. "If you're making it a major focal point of your offense -- though they had success with it -- that's problematic. You want to have some of it, no question, because it's the way to get the numbers back in your favor offensively. And with a quarterback like him, why wouldn't you have some of it?"

"But we're trying to develop him as an all-around quarterback. And I don't know if they had that (as a goal). I'm sure they did a little bit, but I think that's the clear intent moving forward, to develop him as an all-around quarterback. That's part of his growth, from '12 to '13 to now."

Griffin seems eager to embrace making the vast majority of his plays from the pocket rather than with his legs, knowing that approach is necessary for his long-term success in the league. A year removed from last year's ACL/LCL rehabilitation, Griffin is clearly moving more fluidly without his knee brace and made several pretty throws from the pocket during the 90-minute OTA session I witnessed. Afterward he pronounced himself "very comfortable" in Gruden's offense, but acknowledged it's a work very much in progress.

Under Gruden, Washington's offense will feature some elements of the controlled passing game that helped the Bengals reach the playoffs in quarterback Andy Dalton's first three seasons in the league, but with doses of the play-action game that Griffin has excelled in, and plenty of reliance on the Alfred Morris-led running game. Ideally, Gruden is planning to blend the best of what Cincinnati and Washington did offensively.

"We're going to have some different elements from Cincinnati," he said. "Some of the quick passing game will be about having the ability to get the ball out of the quarterback's hands to receivers out in space, and let them make a big play after the catch. It's a low-risk, high-reward type play, and you'll see some of those implemented in our offense. But then, here in Washington, they actually had some good play-action shot plays, and we'll carry some of those we like. There's definitely some concepts I really like and think are necessary for pro football quarterbacks."

The vibe in Washington is predictably upbeat, after the Shanahan era ended in such desultory fashion. I've known Gruden since covering him in 1992 as the star quarterback of the Arena League's Tampa Bay Storm, and I knew his approachable, down-to-earth manner would play well with his players, after the somewhat imperial style of his predecessor in Washington. Chatting with Redskins receiver Santana Moss and newly arrived defensive end Jason Hatcher on Wednesday, both veterans lauded the sixth full-time head coaching hire of owner Daniel Snyder's 15-year tenure with the franchise.

"It's too early to start talking crazy, but I'll just tell you, man, right now the aura in the building is just tremendously great," said Moss, now on his fourth Redskins head coach. "A veteran like myself looks forward to coming to work knowing that you have a coach who's just so relaxed and so efficient at what he's trying to teach us. That way we can go out there and be at ease in what we're doing and what we're learning. I think that kind of approach is a big step toward trying to get your team to believe what you want them to be this year."

Hatcher, the former Cowboy who signed during free agency, called Gruden "a player's coach" but hastily added that he's not incapable of cracking the whip if necessary. "He's not a be-your-friend type of coach," Hatcher said. "He'll put you in your place when you need to be put in your place. But for the most part, he's all about the players and making the environment fun and stress-free. A lot of coaches in the league are not really player's coaches, so once you get that chemistry going, knowing the head coach cares about you, you'll run through the wall for him."

There are no walls to run through in mid-June, in OTAs, but the Redskins did add some quality pieces in Hatcher, receivers DeSean Jackson and Andre Roberts and safety Ryan Clark this offseason, and there is a nucleus of talent on hand that produced a playoff season not that long ago. In the always-competitive NFC East, where the last repeat champion was the 2003-2004 Eagles, Washington has plenty of ground to make up, but it also isn't facing a massive rebuilding project.

There is always pressure to win now in Washington, but Gruden doesn't sound cowed by Dan Snyder's track record of burning through head coaches. When I asked Gruden to give me his perception versus reality impressions of Snyder, he didn't flinch. "As an outsider looking in, when he first took over, he was --," said Gruden, pausing. A bull in a china shop, I suggested? Laughing, Gruden said, "Yeah, I'm not going to lie. But the reality of it is he's a very passionate guy who really cares deeply about the Washington Redskins, their history, their tradition, the fans and this team. And he will do anything in his power to turn it into a champion. And when it's all said and done, that's the bottom line."

"I think we're getting along great so far, but we haven't lost a game yet. I don't know what will happen then."

Gruden's older, more famous, brother, Jon Gruden, has been both a Super Bowl champion coach and a fired coach in this league. He was on hand for Wednesday's workout, and the ex-Raiders and Bucs head coach and current Monday Night Football analyst said Jay Gruden will prove to be a good hire for Griffin's future.

"I think he's organized, and he's going to be steady," Jon Gruden said. "He's proven he's a good play-caller, and I really like the staff he hired. I think the working environment is very good and I think that will help develop the players, particularly the quarterback and the young guys they're rolling along with."

Jay Gruden knows there are no longer three-year windows given to new coaches in the NFL. It's get-it-done mode, every year. In 2013, three of the league's new coaching hires took their teams to the playoffs (Chip Kelly, Andy Reid and Mike McCoy) and two more missed the postseason by one game (Bruce Arians and Marc Trestman). That made it eight consecutive seasons where at least one new coaching hire headed a playoff-bound team in year one.

"Our bar is set high here," Gruden said. "The way you build a team, it can happen quickly. Kansas City was 2-14 one year, then added a quarterback, stopped turning the ball over and made some plays on defense and went to the playoffs. The Eagles get their guys healthy, find a quarterback and all of a sudden they're flying high. That's what happens. It takes some weapons, but I think we have enough people here in this building that we can be competitive every week, and there's no reason why we can't do some great things this season."

Landing Jackson, the exiled Eagles receiver coming off a career year under Kelly in Philadelphia, was the biggest coup Washington executed thus far in 2014. He gives Griffin a proven downfield speed threat and should help draw coverage away from the likes of Pierre Garcon, Roberts and Moss in the passing game. Gruden said he doesn't really care what went wrong for Jackson in Philadelphia. He's just happy the Redskins won the Jackson sweepstakes.

"He's not the only star receiver in the history of the NFL who's left a team and gone elsewhere," Gruden said. "T.O. did it. Randy Moss did it. Jerry Rice left the 49ers. There's been a lot of good players who have left previous teams for whatever reasons, it could be money, could be issues with the coordinator or head coach, whatever the reason is. It doesn't mean he can't play. We're willing to take a chance on this guy."

"He's an explosive player and obviously those guys are hard to find. It's one thing to be fast and another to be extremely tough. He's not afraid of anything. Sometimes in practice it looks like he's coasting, but when you turn on the tape, he's two or three yards past the other receiver running the same route. He's just got a great stride and great control about him."

Gruden's honeymoon phase in Washington remains in bloom for a little while longer, but his own stride and sense of control of his new team has been impressively steady so far. Nothing short of results will truly matter come the regular season, but for now, he's a new head coach in the NFL as summer approaches, and that means all things still seem possible.

Offensive Coordinator Sean McVay

How Sean McVay became Redskins offensive coordinator before his 28th birthday

By Mike Jones
The Washington Post

Anyone who has crossed paths with Sean McVay will tell you he's not normal. They also will say that little about his meteoric rise to offensive coordinator of the Washington Redskins comes as a surprise.

Just six years ago, McVay hung up his cleats after three injury-plagued seasons as a wide receiver for Miami (Ohio) and got an entry-level coaching job on Jon Gruden's staff with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

On Tuesday, the Redskins and Coach Jay Gruden, Jon's brother, finalized the contract that made McVay, who turns 28 next week, the youngest offensive coordinator in the NFL.

A promotion from tight ends coach, the job McVay held for three seasons under Mike Shanahan, was inevitable, people around the league say. McVay had the potential to direct his own unit, and many see him as a head coach in the making.

"He's been around it all his life. He was born into football," said former Redskins quarterbacks coach Matt LaFleur, one of McVay's closest friends. "He's passionate, he's positive and he's persistent. He has this never-say-die attitude. And his preparation is really impressive. He's got all the traits you look for in a coach."

“Sean’s going to be a star — there’s no question,” Jon Gruden gushed. “. . . He’s got an incredible personality and a passion for the game. Plus, he’s intelligent and has a strong work ethic. Sean comes from a great football family. He’s known what he’s wanted to do his whole life. He’s worked hard and been successful with every opportunity that’s been presented to him.”

McVay certainly boasts strong football lineage. His grandfather, John, coached in the World Football League and NFL in the 1970s and spent 21 years in the San Francisco 49ers’ front office, winning five Super Bowls. Sean’s father, Tim, was recruited by Jay Gruden’s father, Jim, and played at Indiana.

During family get-togethers, football dominated the conversations.

“He was always right in the middle of all the discussions with myself, his father and two older uncles,” McVay’s grandfather remembered. “He was one of those kids that matured early — in life and as an athlete. Whether it was soccer or football, he was intense, to say the least. He was always concerned with what teams were doing defensively, what kind of coverages they were playing, who could play man-to-man, who could do this and that.”

The fascination with X’s and O’s never waned.

When McVay realized his playing career wouldn’t continue past college, he turned his attention to coaching and interviewed with Gruden, who hired him as an offensive assistant. Jay Gruden held the same title.

McVay calls himself “really fortunate and blessed” to get that job, acknowledging his family’s connection with the Grudens helped. But he aimed to ensure his work ethic allowed him to stick around.

“I wanted to do whatever job they gave me to the best of my ability, whether it was cutting up film or putting in formations or putting together tip sheets for the coaches, just whatever I could,” McVay said.

Age doesn’t matter

The Bucs fired Gruden following a 9-7 season in 2008. But McVay and Jay Gruden landed on Jim Haslett’s coaching staff for the United Football League’s Florida Tuskers — Gruden as the offensive coordinator and McVay as wide receivers coach.

He was only 22. One of McVay’s players, Jermaine Wiggins, often jokingly asked, “You need me to buy you your beer after the game? Are you sure you’re old enough?”

The ribbing never swayed McVay, however.

“I’ve always had a confidence and a belief in myself that I belonged,” he explained. “And a lot of that comes from being around great coaches who are willing to help you grow faster than you probably would have. And this is what I’ve been around my whole life. It’s where I feel comfortable.”

After that 2009 season with the Tuskers, McVay followed Haslett to Washington, where he was made an offensive assistant, working primarily with Keenan McCardell and his wide receivers unit.

“He was young, but he didn’t just sit in the corner and watch,” former Redskins wide receiver Anthony Armstrong recalled. “He actually had a lot of great insight and did a great job of explaining stuff.”

With roughly a month left in the 2010 season, tight ends coach Jon Embree left the Redskins to coach at Colorado, and McVay filled in. The following winter, when Jay Gruden tried to bring McVay to Cincinnati, where he had accepted the job as the Bengals' offensive coordinator, the Redskins promoted McVay to full-time tight ends coach to avoid losing him.

Washington's tight ends thrived. In 2011, Fred Davis enjoyed a career year and appeared headed for the Pro Bowl before he missed the final four games of the season. The next season, Logan Paulsen had the best year of his career. In 2013, rookie Jordan Reed developed into a threat, setting franchise records for a rookie tight end.

Now McVay is charged with helping the whole offense excel.

The transition poses a challenge but one that is achievable, associates say.

McVay already has the necessary holistic knowledge. The Grudens often preached the importance of "viewing the offense from an 11-man standpoint" regardless of coaching position. Under Kyle Shanahan, McVay was charged with planning third-down packages. And following their talks immediately after his hiring, Jay Gruden deemed McVay the best fit for an offensive coordinator.

"I'm certainly proud but not at all surprised," John McVay said. "Sean is so confident and so deeply involved in this stuff. He's really immersed himself in the game. He's a sharp guy, and he's had some unbelievable opportunities to learn from some great coaches in Jon and Jay Gruden, Jim Haslett and Mike Shanahan and Kyle Shanahan."

A football junkie

Passion, confidence and strong communication skills enable McVay to position his players for success, colleagues say.

"I swear his alarm goes off at 4:45 in the morning, and he thinks, 'Yes! Football!'" former Redskins tight end Chris Cooley said. "He's so excited that he gets to coach, teach and talk football every day, and as a coach, you have to be like that. Because of that, he's the most-prepared coach that I've ever played for, by far. . . . [His message] is very clear because he completely understands it. Players pick up very quickly if a coach isn't really sure or questions the scheme and what it is. But he was always very clear in what he wanted and expected from guys. . . . He's just a little more talented than a lot of people I've been around."

Described as "a people person," McVay also succeeds because of his ability to read his players and cultivate relationships with them.

"You look at the room that I was working with as tight ends this past year," McVay said. "All of those guys are very good football players, but they also learn in different ways. At the end of the day, your job as a coach is to help people achieve at their highest potential. . . . So you need to get a feel for those players as people and find, 'What's the best way to motivate them and help them reach that highest potential?' That's always fascinated me."

McVay's biggest task — and the most important relationship he must cultivate — involves quarterback Robert Griffin III, who will try to rebound from a tumultuous second season.

Gruden will serve as play-caller and also will work with Griffin, but McVay is expected to help the transition by blending the best elements of the old offense with those of Gruden's playbook.

McVay embraces the challenge, viewing it as simply one more requirement in his progression.

"I can't control what happened last year," he said. "All I can control is the relationship that I have with Robert, and we're going to develop that, and it's going to be strong. . . . We're going to work and succeed together, and any failures, we'll go through those together as well. So I'm not worried about what has happened before. I'm just excited about what's ahead."

Defensive Coordinator Jim Haslett

Jim Haslett thinks this year's defense has a lot of potential

For four seasons — three of which ended with 10 or more losses — defensive coordinator Jim Haslett followed orders while former head coach Mike Shanahan made his job more difficult by tinkering with the defense, people within the organization say. And although Haslett often was frustrated that Shanahan, who had roster control, invested more heavily on offense during free agency, he kept his concerns in house.

With the arrival of new Coach Jay Gruden, with whom Haslett worked previously, things have changed. Team President and General Manager Bruce Allen, who now has final say over the roster, committed almost $26 million in guaranteed money to retain outside linebacker Brian Orakpo and defensive lineman Chris Baker, and lure defensive lineman Jason Hatcher from the Dallas Cowboys.

Haslett is confident Orakpo, Hatcher and Baker will play major roles in bolstering Washington's pass rush, which hasn't been good enough since Shanahan scrapped the team's longtime, successful 4-3 defense in favor of a 3-4 alignment. Haslett is also optimistic about improvement in the secondary — Washington's safeties probably couldn't play much worse — and generally pleased with the defensive roster at this stage of the offseason.

On July 23, the Redskins report to training camp in Richmond. After the team completed minicamp on Wednesday at Redskins Park, Haslett is eager to get going again.

"I like our guys. I really do," Haslett said the other day. "We've got a good group. We've got some versatility to do different things."

With the arrival of Hatcher, who had 11 sacks for the Cowboys last fall, Haslett plans to be highly aggressive in rushing the passer. Orakpo and Ryan Kerrigan, Washington's starting outside linebackers, are expected to have more freedom to attack than they had under Shanahan.

"We're going to try to take advantage of some of the guys we have," Haslett said.

Haslett has many ideas about how to best use Hatcher, who was scheduled to undergo arthroscopic knee surgery Thursday and may miss the beginning of training camp. “I’m not a doctor. I don’t know” when Hatcher will return, Haslett said. “I just know he’s a heck of a football player. We’re excited to have him on our team. He’s going to be fine.”

An improved pass rush would help the secondary. But the Redskins need their young defensive backs, especially David Amerson and Bacarri Rambo, to take big steps forward.

“Obviously, that’s a key,” Haslett said. “You’ve got to have some guys grow up. It’s a maturation process. We expect all of those guys to get better and better.”

Special Teams Coordinator Ben Kotwica

Redskins’ Ben Kotwica has players lining up to join his ‘special forces’

By Mike Jones
The Washington Post
July 10, 2014

The former Apache helicopter pilot and company commander stood in front of the room and issued the challenge.

“Who wants to join my special forces?” Ben Kotwica asked, strong and clear as he conducted his first special teams meeting at Redskins Park back in the spring. He spoke of pride, commitment, and a physical style of play, and again, asked who wanted to join his “special forces.”

Ears perked up. Things had definitely changed.

Special teams play ranked among the lowest of the lowlights during Washington’s 3-13 campaign in 2013.

Keith Burns never could find the right buttons to push as the first-year coordinator who took over for the long-time, well-respected firecracker of a special teams coach, Danny Smith. Burns struggled to find willing participants to round out his units. Some players disagreed with his philosophies and schemes, and that led to arguments in meeting rooms and sometimes on the sidelines. During one heated exchange, Burns challenged a player to fight him.

There was nothing special about Washington’s special teams units. All pride in the units had been lost.

And so, finding the right man to overhaul the unit ranked among Jay Gruden’s first moves after being hired as head coach in January.

He zeroed in on Kotwica, whose contract with the New York Jets had just expired. Under Kotwica, the Jets in 2013 ranked among the top 10 in the NFL in kickoff return yards, and 17th on kickoff coverage. By no coincidence, those two areas had ranked among Washington’s biggest weaknesses.

It also wasn’t just happenstance that some of Kotwica’s strengths — discipline, planning, strong motivational and communication skills — represented weaknesses of the previous coordinator.

Kotwica had proven himself as a fast riser in the NFL coaching ranks. And his leadership skills came without question both on the field and off.

‘Apply within’

After concluding his senior season as a linebacker for Army, where he anchored the defense and helped his team to 10 wins — most in school history — Kotwica went on to serve his country as an Apache helicopter pilot. During his eight years in the Army, Kotwica deployed to Bosnia, and was stationed in Korea. In 2004, as a captain in the second Iraq war, Kotwica flew more than 1,000 combat hours.

Kotwica never lost his love for football, and he realized coaching bore a number of similarities to his role as a company commander, where he had to unite a group of men, get them to buy in on an important mission and execute with precision.

Upon completion of his military career in 2005, Bob Sutton, Kotwica’s former coach at West Point, helped the soldier get a job as the defensive coordinator for the U.S. Military Academy prep school’s football team.

Two years later, upon Sutton’s recommendation, then-Jets head coach Eric Mangini gave Kotwica an entry-level job on his staff as a quality control assistant for the defensive and special teams units. Six years later, he was promoted to special teams coordinator.

Now in Washington, Kotwica assumes the task of rebuilding the special teams units. During free agency, the Redskins pursued players who could contribute there, not just on offense or defense.

In the opening days of the shopping period, Washington signed wide receiver Andre Roberts, who will compete as a punt and kick returner, and linebackers Akeem Jordan and Adam Hayward, who had both served as special teams captains for their previous teams.

During his initial address and in meetings since, Kotwica has stressed the importance of excellence on special teams. This isn’t where players incapable of starting get stashed, as a number of players viewed the units last season. Kotwica wants and expects the best.

“I think any time you try to form a unit or an organization, you want to instill a culture,” Kotwica said. “So there are things that I’ve brought from my military background. I put an ‘Apply within’ sign on my front door, and we’re taking all applicants, and I think guys have bought into that. A lot of guys have signed up and want to help this ballclub.”

Thus far, Kotwica’s tactics have worked.

There’s a new air in the special teams meetings and practices, said fullback Darrel Young — one of the few bright spots on the units last season. He said Kotwica, with his militaristic style, has impressed players and already has proven himself as “a leader of men.”

Fellow special teams standout Niles Paul — one of the few players last season who seemed vexed over the disarray of the unit — agrees.

“We’ve got a bunch of — with all the people we brought in — a bunch of people feeding off each other, who believe in what we’re doing out here and who are having a good time,” Paul said. “It’s definitely the way Ben communicates. You know Ben is a military guy. First day of special teams, he addressed us and said, ‘Who wants to join my special forces?’ And everybody was like, ‘Dang, I want to join the special forces.’ He’s getting everybody to buy into what he’s selling. We’re believing in him. That’s the big thing when you get a new coach, is guys believing in him. . . . Guys are communicating, guys are wanting to make tackles. That’s what special teams is all about.”

Gruden agreed that Kotwica’s approach makes it impossible for players to take his message lightly or disrespect him.

“Hell,” Gruden chuckled. “He intimidates me. I’m never going to overstep my boundaries with him.”

Leading by example

But Kotwica has done more than talk. He has backed up his all-hands-on-deck message by enlisting the services of position coaches to help the special teams staff in an attempt to ensure that his players receive the best instruction possible, and to spark greater unity.

“I think that you can talk special teams and how important it is, but you’ve got to walk it,” Kotwica said. “I think when you incorporate those other coaches, I think the players see that and feel how important that is. You can hear that special teams are important and field position is important, but when players see [wide receivers coach] Ike Hilliard, [running backs coach] Randy Jordan helping out, it internalizes that.”

In addition to speed, physicality and precision, Kotwica has stressed the importance of competition. He has both inexperienced and seasoned players auditioning for roles on his units. Washington also has two place kickers, two punters and even two long snappers competing for jobs — a rarity.

Kotwica believes that competition will cause the players to work harder for jobs while also positioning him to field the best possible units, which will spur a Washington turnaround. That and preparation represent the biggest keys to success, the coach believes.

“Whether it’s in the desert of Iraq or out on the football field on Sunday,” Kotwica said, “you have to be able to make adjustments and instill that confidence in your soldiers or your players that the job is going to get done.”

S Ryan Clark

‘Old guy’ Ryan Clark will fill leadership role for Redskins

By Brian McNally
The Washington Times
June 18, 2014

Redskins safety Ryan Clark eyed the group of former players who showed up to watch a minicamp practice this week and smiled.

By his rough count, Clark, now 34 and back with Washington for the first time since 2005 after signing as a free agent this spring, had played with a quarter of the ex-Redskins who attended. Most of those men have long since finished their football careers. Clark is still going with no plans to stop.

“I guess that tells you a little bit about when I was here,” Clark joked after a minicamp practice on Wednesday. “But for me, it’s good. There are a lot of places I could have went where it would have been like starting over. This really isn’t. I have a foundation here. I know people here. I also know the fanbase. I know what it is to be a member of this team. ... It was a good choice.”

Safety was a problem area for Washington throughout last year’s miserable 3-13 campaign. It had to be addressed. And while Clark’s age makes him a short-term answer, coaches and teammates say he still brings value at a position of need. On a defense that lost its unquestioned leader, linebacker London Fletcher, to retirement, Clark could help fill that void.

“I love a guy like Ryan to be around just for what our defense was missing,” said wide receiver Santana Moss, who played with Clark in Washington in 2005. “I think with London leaving, Ryan is the next best guy to be out there, to be able to listen to and to be able to talk to these young guys.”

Moss remembers Clark, undrafted out of LSU before catching on with the New York Giants in 2002, calling out plays and communicating with defensive teammates — veterans whose heads would swivel to see if this unheralded youngster knew what he was doing. He usually did.

Clark parlayed his tenure with Washington into eight seasons with the Pittsburgh Steelers, where that defense ranked in the top five in the NFL in yards allowed per game for six years in a row and led the league four times.

Clark started 109 of 111 games with the Steelers, played alongside strong safety Troy Polamalu and went to two Super Bowls, winning one of them. In 2011 he was named to the Pro Bowl.

In Washington, the mercurial Brandon Meriweather is what passed for a steady veteran last season. Given his checkered disciplinary history, that didn’t amount to much. Otherwise at safety, the Redskins have Tanard Jackson, stained by multiple drug suspensions and a complete question mark in his return to the NFL; the talented Phillip Thomas, who missed his entire rookie year with a Lisfranc injury to his left foot; and Bacarri Rambo, who was overwhelmed as a rookie last season.

“You have to have great communication skills,” defensive coordinator Jim Haslett said. “And we’ll give [Clark] some leeway. When we game plan we’ll have those guys have some checks and do some different things because, obviously, he can handle it. He did some [Wednesday]. That’s a good addition to our football team.”

Redskins quarterback Robert Griffin III laughed when asked about Clark. In one of their first conversations as teammates, the two men recalled a game at Pittsburgh in 2012 when Griffin went out for a pass, was whistled for a pass interference penalty and was promptly drilled with a helmet-to-helmet hit by Clark. It wasn’t funny at the time, though, and Griffin joked that play was quickly deleted from the team’s playbook.

“I think what everyone points to is leadership,” Griffin said. “But you just can’t come in and start talking and have people listen to you no matter what your pedigree is. I think [Clark] has done a good job coming in and showing it, working hard and then making plays out on the field. ... We’re glad to have him.”

But leadership is an intangible. Clark is determined to show that a disappointing 2013 season, when Pittsburgh tumbled to 13th in yards allowed and missed the playoffs for a second consecutive year, wasn't indicative of age catching up to him.

Clark started all 16 games for the Steelers and had two interceptions. But his play suffered compared to 2012, which he considers the finest season of his career. He is sure that level isn't beyond him yet.

"They call me 'old guy' around here. Every now and then, the younger guys point to my age," Clark said. "And I tell them 'I'm still good enough to be running around with you.' So either they gotta get better or eventually I gotta be 40."

QB Kirk Cousins

Forget flash, quarterback Kirk Cousins goes for comfort with his ride to Washington

When it comes to training camp arrivals, Washington quarterback Kirk Cousins is the anti-Reggie Wayne.

Unlike the Indianapolis Colts receiver, who pulled into the parking lot of the Colts camp facility last week in an Indy car driven by professional driver Ed Carpenter, Cousins opted for a more conservative method of transportation when he and his wife, Julie, arrived in town in a conversion van.

The van, a limited-edition 2000 model, belonged to his grandfather who passed away during the offseason, Cousins told The Washington Post, and it was no longer needed by his grandmother. So he bought it from her.

"It'll serve us well (in the Washington area), because my wife and I each have a car, but then when people come into town, it'll kind of be a third car," said Cousins, the former Michigan State quarterback and Holland native. "And it's perfect for driving the hour-and-a-half from Ashburn to the games. And then they can tailgate, and they've got a TV in there, and you can kind of carry luggage in there. So it works well when visitors come to town for games, and Julie and I will take it on road trips in the offseason."

Cousins' entrance wasn't as grand as Wayne's for other reasons, too, since Washington players reach the practice facility in Richmond, Va., via a shuttle bus. So the van has not yet been seen by his teammates.

"Wait until I roll into the facility when we get back to Ashburn," Cousins said. "That'll be fun. I think my teammates will laugh a little bit."

Before he left, Cousins said the van even attracted attention around West Michigan.

"You know what, sometimes I'd pull up to a stoplight when I was driving around Holland, and I think they'd expect an elderly person or a middle-aged dad to be pulling up," he said. "And sure enough, I pull up."

QB Robert Griffin III

Robert Griffin III and Jay Gruden: Inside a budding relationship

By Albert Breer

NFL.com

June 5, 2014

ASHBURN, Va. -- Jay Gruden was hired to coach a superstar.

But he says that's anything but what he's found the task to be with Robert Griffin III, as the Washington Redskins work through organized team activities and approach the summer break.

Yes, Griffin is high-profile. Yes, there's the ugly way last season played out. Yes, there's a lot on the line, considering what the franchise has invested in its 24-year-old front man. Yes, this is a player who's basked in a smoldering spotlight since bursting onto the national scene midway through the 2011 college season.

And yet, what has struck Gruden the most thus far is ...

"How smart he is," Gruden said, in a private moment after Wednesday's OTA practice. "He picked up everything effortlessly. He works hard at it, he studies it, he understands the position, and he's willing to learn and willing to take coaching. A guy with as much success as he's had, as early as he is in this young stage of his life, some guys are like, 'Eh, I don't need your coaching, I don't need this, I wanna do it my way.' He's not that way at all. He wants to be coached, he wants to learn the game, he wants to study.

"He wants to be the greatest. And he knows he has a long way to go, which is refreshing from a guy that's had a Heisman Trophy and as much publicity as he's had. He knows he has work to do, and he's willing to put in the work. That's strikes me as ... I just wasn't expecting that."

Hard to blame Gruden for his preconceived notions. No matter which side you fall on, the waning moments of the 2013 Redskins' 3-13 campaign were marked by a clash between old-school coach and new-school quarterback. Some saw the former as unbending. Others saw the latter as too headstrong.

So there was a shakeup. Mike Shanahan was fired. General manager Bruce Allen was given more control and, eventually, the title of president. Gruden was brought in to fix the rest.

The way the new head coach sees it, when it comes to the game's most vital position, he already has plenty to work with.

"I think the total package you look for in a quarterback, if you're gonna create a player on Xbox, a quarterback, I think it'd look like (Griffin)," Gruden said. "I want a guy that can run 4.4, 4.3. I want a guy that can throw it this far, I want a guy that can scramble in the pocket. I want a guy that's smart enough to handle this, this and this. That's what you want. Now, it's time for him to go out there and do it."

Gruden very cautiously concedes that his relationship with Griffin might be the most important one in the building -- "It is, but I think my relationship with everybody is important" -- and as such, the new boss knows these days are important ones. Gruden, who spent the past three seasons as the Cincinnati Bengals' offensive coordinator, landed the Redskins' head-coaching gig on Jan. 9. He's been working with RGIII since the offseason program began on April 7. What's next? Plenty.

During our conversation, Gruden detailed where he and Griffin need to go over the coming months. To be sure, there's lots of work to do.

The Offense

Griffin said Wednesday that there are similarities between the offense he ran under Shanahan and the one Gruden is installing now, in that both have West Coast roots. But, Gruden said, "For certain plays and schemes, you have to treat them like he's never heard of them -- because he's never heard of them. And then you have to show him."

The coach said they put in maybe 25 or 30 concepts in a typical day, and the offense will rep those against a certain coverage and look. The next day, the concept might come against a different look -- and no one will have more responsibility to react to that change than Griffin. In that way, Gruden says there are times he has to coach Griffin like he did Andy Dalton when Dalton was a Bengals rookie in 2011. Other times it's easier, because Griffin is familiar with the concept.

"It's a whole training of your brain -- where you wanna go, how quick you can get there, the decisions you make as a quarterback against each coverage with each concept," Gruden said. "It'll take some time. But we have a lot of time, we have some film projectors in here, and he's willing to look at those and study them."

The Player

In describing Griffin as a dreamt-up video-game terror, Gruden freely admits there's a personal challenge rooted in his lack of experience with dual-threat quarterbacks. He's learning, too. He doesn't want Griffin to have his head ripped off. He also doesn't want to black out a rare athlete's electricity.

"It's one of the great dilemmas that I have as a coach," he explained. "How do you tell a guy not to scramble, when I see Russell Wilson and (Colin) Kaepernick and even Andrew Luck and Aaron Rodgers make some of the biggest plays throughout the course of a game or season on broken plays? So you can't just say, 'Robert, I want you in the pocket; if it's not there, throw it away.' I want him to be himself and play."

Griffin logged 120 carries (eight per game) in his Offensive Rookie of the Year campaign of 2012. That number dropped to 86, or 6.6 per game, last year. Gruden's still figuring out whether it should dip again in 2014.

"I'm not gonna be the type of guy that's like, 'Hey, don't ever scramble. Stay in the pocket. I want you to be like Tom Brady,'" Gruden said. "Part of the thing that draws you to a guy like that is that he's not like everyone else. He's a special player playing the position like nobody else has played it. So we have to use his strengths, also. Maybe sometimes, he makes a poor decision or takes a hard hit that, hopefully, he gets up from. In the meantime, part of my job is to reduce the risk."

The Mindset

Gruden said he can reduce the risk plenty through play calling, managing the number of called runs and finding ways to get the ball out of Griffin's hands quicker. But there's also an element that he's coaching into Griffin now, as Shanahan did in 2012 and '13.

The coach and quarterback have watched plenty of film to try to improve Griffin's habits on two fronts. First, there's tape that shows Griffin bypassing chances to get out of bounds unscathed -- opting instead to pick up a couple of extra yards. Gruden is trying to get his QB to weigh risk and reward, teaching him that punting can be OK.

"Get yourself out of bounds, let's get to the huddle and play the next one," Gruden said, relating his advice to RGIII. "But like I said before, he's such a competitor; he wants every play to succeed. He's gotta understand, the defense is gonna win their battles. It's about winning the entire war, so to speak, from the position. Knowing when to throw it away and punt."

Second, there's the issue of ball security, which Gruden sees as paramount.

"You don't have to scramble around and hold the ball out here and get a forced fumble," Gruden said. "Part of it is uncoachable. It's instinct."

The Progression

During Griffin's transcendent 2012 season, many were quick to crown the quarterback. The truth is, he was running many of his college concepts as a rookie. Eventually, the NFL caught up to some of it, and in that way, part of his growth was delayed a year. The ACL tear that required him to undergo surgery in January 2013 only complicated that. All of which Gruden recognizes.

"He's gotta play," Gruden said. "He's not gonna become the greatest quarterback in Year 3; he's gonna have his growing pains. It's a matter of learning the position, and learning situations, protections, when to throw it away, when not to throw it away, when maybe not to take that hit. All that. All the situations, the touch throws, the anticipation throws, the deep throws. Every game is different, and is gonna become a different challenge for him. ... He's just gotta play."

The good news? Gruden sees a player who can roll with the punches, pointing to a sequence of plays on Wednesday as evidence. Griffin threw a pick, overthrew a receiver on an out-breaking route, then threw another pick. Backup Kirk Cousins came in to get his reps, then third-stringer Colt McCoy took his turn. Griffin came back and, Gruden said, reeled off "four great plays," showing an ability to process his mistakes and continue moving forward.

"We're challenging him right now," Gruden said. "We're throwing a lot of fastballs at him -- see what he can hit. Some good, hard-breaking pitches, low and away -- see what happens, see if he bites at them. It's great. He's handled it great, man."

And that brings us back to the crucial nature of the relationship between Gruden, a former quarterback himself and a teacher of the position by trade, and Griffin. The third-year Redskin is reluctant to expound on it now, because he knows the implications of his words and how they could be projected back to last year. But Gruden sees positive signs.

"There's gotta be some trust there," he said. "I know Robert already, and I have a solid enough relationship there where he knows I'm not gonna call him out, and I know he's not gonna call me out. Whatever happens, I know we're on the same page, with the same goals in mind, and that's to win as many games as possible. And that's all that matters, the goals we have. As long as he's working every day, buying into the system, then everything is gonna go smoothly."

Which is to say, so far, so good.

CB DeAngelo Hall

DeAngelo Hall aims to lead a Washington Redskins defensive rebound

By Mike Jones
The Washington Post
July 25, 2014

RICHMOND — With 10 seasons under his belt, DeAngelo Hall knows he's closer to the end of his career than the start. But he fully believes he still ranks among the best cornerbacks in the NFL. He also believes the Redskins' defense, a year after a woeful season, can become one of the league's top units.

Earlier this week, Hall watched a television program that featured a debate about the top cornerbacks in the NFL. His name was not mentioned. Miffed, he took to Twitter and declared he measures up against the top players at his position.

As he kicked off the 11th training camp of his career Thursday, Hall laughed when asked about his tweets but didn't back down.

“As a corner, if you don't feel like you're the best, then you've got a problem,” said Hall, 30. “I never said that I was the best. I'd be a fool to think that 11 years in I'm the best in the game. But I do think I've been pretty successful doing what I'll do.”

In 10 seasons, Hall has racked up 564 tackles, 127 pass breakups and 43 interceptions — five returned for touchdowns. He's one of only five active defensive backs with 40-plus interceptions (behind Ed Reed, Charles Woodson, Champ Bailey and Asante Samuel).

But Hall doesn't generally command the same type of respect as those veterans or even as much as some of the young stars at the position. Asked why, Hall thought for a second before answering.

“Maybe my reputation,” he said, referring to his image as a brash, hot-headed player in his younger years. “My reputation kind of precedes me a little bit. But I don't go out there trying to please the media or the guys that are ranking corners. Probably early in my career, I did. But now I'm just, ‘The proof's in the pudding.’ ”

More than anything, Hall said he wants to conclude his career — however many seasons that remain — as a winner. Since joining the Redskins in 2008, Washington has reached the playoffs just once (in 2012). For his career, Hall has played in only two other playoff games (both in 2004 while with Atlanta).

“Mentally, I'm just in a place where I know I don't have a lot of football left, so I want to go out there, have as much fun as possible, lay it all on the line and not leave anything in the tank, so when I do walk away from this game, I feel good about it,” Hall said. “That's just been my approach to these offseason practices and even last year. I just want to have fun and help us win as many games as possible.”

Hall added, “The goal is not about my individual success. . . . I understand it’s not about me but about this team, and I’m just trying to make everybody better.”

Hall’s approach comes as a welcome development for Coach Jay Gruden and his staff. Soon after accepting the job, Gruden reached out to Hall — then a free agent — and stressed that the team wanted to re-sign him. Gruden also told Hall he and defensive coordinator Jim Haslett wanted and needed Hall to help fill the leadership void created by linebacker London Fletcher’s retirement.

Haslett was confident Hall could handle the role after seeing him display greater maturity last season. Gruden accepted Haslett’s endorsement. Thus far, Hall has delivered.

“I did hear about DeAngelo Hall a little bit, some of the reputation, some of the things that happened, the attitude that he has,” Gruden said. “But as a cornerback, you kind of want some of that attitude, that cockiness, that confident air about you as long as it doesn’t affect your play. He’s proven the last few years that it doesn’t affect his play, and I think he’s calmed down a little bit. He knows what being a pro is all about.”

He added, “We’re happy with his leadership role and his accountability right now.”

That doesn’t mean Hall feels he has nothing to prove. He does and says the entire Redskins defense does as well. He says his defensive teammates want to maintain that mentality as they try to rebound from a 3-13 season.

“Absolutely, there is a chip on our shoulder,” Hall said. “Seeing Seattle go out there and have a dominant defense, going into this offseason, they’re what everybody is talking about. Everybody wants that kind of attention and that kind of love. So we all have got a chip on our shoulder — not just the secondary. We all want to be great.”

WR DeSean Jackson

DeSean Jackson needed a job; the Redskins needed to take a chance

By Jason Reid
The Washington Post
May 29, 2014

Wide receiver DeSean Jackson is a great fit with the Washington Redskins. With the big-play wideout at the top of their depth chart, the Redskins could have one of the NFL’s best receiving corps. Jackson and the Redskins just have to make it work, which often hasn’t been the case when the Redskins acquire high-profile veterans.

It’ll be Jackson’s responsibility to break the negative trend. For the Redskins to get their money’s worth from Jackson — whom they guaranteed $16 million — he’ll have to do something he didn’t do enough with the division rival Philadelphia Eagles last season: be professional. No more blowing off team meetings and arguing with coaches. Jackson must be all in on making the most of his second chance. It’s early, but he’s acting as if he gets it.

Jackson, who suffered a minor hamstring injury Thursday, has been engaged and cooperative during offseason practice at Redskins Park.

“I’m a new, unfamiliar face here,” Jackson said. “Just rubbing elbows with the guys and putting in the work. . . . Getting in where I fit in.”

New Redskins Coach Jay Gruden hasn’t witnessed the type of I’m-the-center-of-the-universe nonsense that prompted Eagles Coach Chip Kelly to cut Jackson surprisingly in late March.

“The players have embraced him. The coaches have embraced,” Gruden said. “As long as he comes to practice, with the right head on his shoulders and [is] willing to work, which he has so far, [Jackson’s past issues will] never be an issue” with the Redskins.

Jackson, Redskins players are eager to tell you, has been a model teammate.

“We’ve gotten to know him,” quarterback Robert Griffin III said. “We’re happy with what we know.”

Jackson is bright and immensely talented. He’s capable of being one of the league’s most productive deep threats, which he was last fall while totaling 82 catches, 1,332 yards (a 16.2-yard average) and nine touchdowns. And he’s just 27.

None of that mattered to Kelly. The Eagles’ top football official, reportedly, was tired of butting heads with Jackson about, well, pick a topic. Jackson’s in-game shouting match with his position coach on the sideline last season hastened his departure from the organization that drafted him. The fact that Jackson’s former teammates didn’t rush to support him publicly lends credibility to Kelly’s move.

On social media, some Redskins fans expressed opposition to the team signing Jackson. They cited the team’s long list of free-agent failures — is Albert Haynesworth still drawing a paycheck? — in arguing management should pass on Jackson. Even my friend and colleague Mike Wise, who isn’t usually in lockstep with Redskins fans, wrote a column about Jackson potentially ruining the locker room.

Last fall, the Redskins went 3-13, finishing last in the NFC East division for the fifth time in six seasons. Former coach Mike Shanahan was at war with Griffin. The organization had more leaks than an old roof. This franchise was a mess long before Jackson arrived.

Without taking some risks, the Redskins will remain stuck in reverse. And if you have to take a chance, it might as well be on a player who covers the 40-yard dash in 4.35 seconds.

Jackson understands he has “a job to do, which is to go out there and produce,” he said. “And doing what I need to do as a professional . . . that’s what matters the most.”

The Redskins have lacked a game-changer at wideout since Santana Moss, who turns 35 in June, was young. With Jackson and fellow newcomer Andre Roberts on the field, Pierre Garcon should have more room to maneuver. But it all starts with Jackson. His ability to get open down the field could do wonders for Griffin.

“He’s just a talent, man,” Moss said of Jackson, a 2009 first-team all-pro selection as a punt returner. “When you look at what he can do . . . he’s one of these guys who’s just gifted.

“So many years, I played here, and we didn’t have no one else [at the outside receiver position]. Now, we have Pierre; we have Dre [Roberts]. It’s just fun to be around these guys.”

Moss is a leader in the locker room. He's also a hard worker who puts his teammates first. In Philadelphia, Jackson was considered a "me" guy. Jackson no longer plays for the Eagles, Moss reminded reporters Thursday, and his slate is clean with the Redskins.

"There's always two sides to every story," Moss said. "To tell you the truth, I don't want to hear about the story, about what went on. He's here now. As long as he act right, do what he have to do here . . . that's all we have to worry about."

After his previous employer gave Jackson the boot, the Redskins gave him a job. They're counting on him to prove he deserves it.

DeSean Jackson won't sever roots

Despite rumors of gang ties, star wide receiver refuses to ignore his past

By Cord Jefferson

DeSEAN JACKSON HAS an interesting linguistic tic that surfaces whenever he talks about things of the "illegal" or "unsavory" or "criminal" variety. After parking his lengthy two-tone Rolls-Royce outside an East Hollywood café one day in late May, Jackson ambles in and begins speaking about his relationships with "certain people" who do "certain things." People presumably involved in potentially illegal or dangerous activity are "certain people." Things that may be done outside the parameters of the law are "certain things." Combined with his habit of speaking softly, as if to avoid the prying of eavesdroppers, this intentionally vague use of "certain" makes clear that Jackson, 27, is a man working hard to avoid giving ammunition to those who would seek to destroy him with his own words.

Sitting down next to me, wearing a cotton T-shirt, sweatpants and a flat-brim, he crosses his arms, which boast a considerable assortment of black-ink tattoos. Most of the images and words are difficult to make out, but two things are clear: First, running almost the entirety of Jackson's right forearm is the Hollywood sign, an immediate reminder that, despite his many football-related travels, Los Angeles will always be Jackson's home. Second, across the backs of both hands, in delicate and loopy cursive, is a two-part mantra you can read when Jackson brings his fists together at the knuckles: "No Struggle, No Progress."

It's maybe not the most unique sentiment for someone in high-level sports, in which sweat and hustle through hardship are professional obligations. But Jackson is more familiar with struggle than most. Earlier this year, after coming off the most successful season of his professional career, with 82 catches for 1,332 yards and nine touchdowns, Jackson was cut from the Eagles, his first and only NFL team since joining the league in 2008. Though he signed a $24 million deal with Washington just six days later, the shock waves from his release lingered, exacerbated by the maelstrom of confusing and contrasting rumors that Jackson was cut because he had gang ties.

Attempting to find the true story behind the speculation reveals the primary tension at the heart of the turmoil, a tension that has implications for how the league will do business in the coming years: Jackson likes to believe his life began the day he was born, while some people would rather he pretend it began the day he joined the NFL.

IF YOU TALK to those in DeSean's inner circle, backroom rumors of gang connections plagued Jackson even before he joined the Eagles. His mother, Gayle, says the family has long suspected that anxiety about such gossip -- along with concerns about a "difficult" (read: overbearing) family -- is what caused DeSean to fall to the second round in 2008 after mock drafts had him going in the first. "Definitely," Gayle says, "his associations and affiliations were always a subject of fear."

To understand the origins of those associations, one needs to go back a few decades, to Pittsburgh, where DeSean's father, Bill Jackson, was raised. Growing up, Bill was always desperate to play sports, but he was forbidden by his own dad, who valued labor over athletics. "He was a huge fan of baseball and track and stuff like that," says DeSean, "but he was never able to play, because his dad was making him work at the steel mill."

After Bill's father died in 1979, Bill and Gayle moved to Southern California to start over. When Bill's eldest son, Byron, graduated from high school in 1986, Bill moved him from the Washington, D.C., area, where he'd been living with his mother (Bill's first wife), to LA so he could play football year-round. Byron, who had displayed some athletic talent but was never a star football player, says his dad was "determined" to see him play in the NFL, so much so that Bill used to close his letters to Byron during his high school years with "Think NFL!!!" DeSean was born in December of that year.

With hard work and a lot of pushing from Bill, Byron eventually became a wide receiver at San Jose State. After college, he got picked up for the Chiefs' practice squad, but he washed out after two seasons. He tried his hand at the Canadian Football League and the World League of American Football (NFL Europa), but his heart wasn't in it anymore. "I was more doing it for my dad than anything else," says Byron, now 46 and an editor at Fox Sports.

When Byron finally broke it to his father that he was abandoning his attempts to play professional football in 1994, Bill grew angry and began throwing Byron's clothes onto the street. According to a documentary Byron made about DeSean, the two began to scuffle, and the argument got so out of hand that Bill wound up pointing a handgun in his son's face. Byron left the house, telling Bill he never wanted to see him again.

From then on, Bill began focusing all his efforts on DeSean. Since he was 5 years old, 4-foot-nothing and 40 pounds, DeSean had been a sight to behold: thin enough that it looked like his pads might slip right off but faster than everyone else on the field. When he threw his head back on a run, as if the force of the wind were too much to bear, that's when you knew he was gone.

Even today, you'd be forgiven for not immediately presuming Jackson is a football star. He's all muscle but also lean, at 5-foot-10 and 175 pounds. At lunch at the East Hollywood café, he only nibbles at his chicken sandwich and potato chips, supplementing them with a few bites of a friend's breakfast burrito. He's quick to tell people size doesn't matter. "I was always the smallest," he says, "but I've always been one of the fastest and the best."

It was DeSean's talent that brought Byron and Bill Jackson back together after two years of not speaking. "I knew he was going to push my little brother the same way he pushed me," says Byron. "DeSean had a passion for football at an early age. I knew I had to come back to help my dad lead DeSean."

When DeSean was 8, Byron tapped a network of friends to comprise DeSean's personal training camp, which they eventually began calling Team Jackson. But even with a team of adults guiding him, the path was tough. Jackson says his parents' jobs -- Bill was a bus driver, Gayle was an assistant at a record label -- "just barely put food on the dinner table." His mom and dad split when he was 7, and his mother relocated to Atlanta. Though

DeSean went to live with her briefly during her first year in Georgia, Gayle ultimately agreed to let him move back with his father; she thought it was important for him to have the "male mentorship" Bill and Team Jackson provided.

By then, Bill was living in South Central, a neighborhood that became synonymous with gangs and violence in the 1980s and '90s. DeSean says he was only 12 when he saw another boy get gunned down in a drive-by. Bill decided to enroll his son at Long Beach Polytechnic High, the best football school in Southern California. The commute was an hour each way and involved a walk through various gang territories, a bus ride and then a train ride through rough neighborhoods to downtown Long Beach. "On a daily basis I witnessed a lot of violence, a lot of drug abuse," Jackson says.

To protect his son, Bill would often wait outside the train station for DeSean in the evenings. "His dad was like white on rice with that boy," Gayle says. "Buddy, you had best believe when it was time to get off that train his dad was right there."

It's easy to read about Jackson's upbringing and make assumptions about his involvement in a gang. But according to Jackson and those closest to him, life in the neighborhood was more complex than many care to understand.

"When I was young, I hung out with and knew certain people who were involved in certain things," says Jackson at the lunch table, that tic rising to the surface again. "But at the same time, they knew I played sports, so they supported me in playing sports."

"It's the same story with most kids growing up in the inner city," Byron says. "There's that one kid who's athletic as heck and everybody sees he's destined to be great. So the guys involved in mischievous things want to stay cool with him, but at the same time they don't want to derail him."

In Jackson's interactions with "certain people" who did "certain things" during his childhood, there was an unwritten agreement: DeSean was going places, and so he had their blessing to avoid the paths they'd chosen. In return, he would not look down on them or turn his back on them. In fact, if you ask Gayle Jackson, she'll tell you DeSean's loyalty is one of his most frustrating qualities.

"Those guys gravitated toward him because he had structure in his life," she says. "A lot of time I was trying to chase these cats away. I told him it would catch up with him and that people don't understand, so he should leave those guys alone. He told me, 'Mom, you can't treat people like that.'"

HERE IS WHAT DeSean Jackson will say about the gang rumors: Does he know people in gangs? Yes. Does he associate with "certain people" from time to time? Yes. Is he in a gang himself? No, nor has he ever been. The "troubling associations" described in an NJ.com article on March 28, the day Jackson was released, centered largely on his relationship with Theron Shakir, a rapper signed to Jackson's Jaccpot Records music label. (Jackson raps as a hobby.) In 2010, Shakir and a man named Marques Binns were arrested and charged with a gang-related homicide. Shakir was acquitted of the crime in 2013, and Binns, who was convicted and is now serving 15 years to life, told NJ.com that he does not know DeSean Jackson.

The site also pointed to a 2012 incident in which someone was shot and killed after a party at a South LA building leased by a member of Jackson's family. Jackson was nowhere near the building at the time of the shooting, but a search of the premises turned up some receipts, a gun permit and other documents belonging to him -- hardly incriminating evidence of his involvement. (Eagles coach Chip Kelly told reporters Jackson was cut only for football reasons.)

The other thing that's bound to arise in any discussion of Jackson's background is that he throws up gang signs in pictures on social media, in his rap videos and during games. "Those were neighborhood Crip gang signs," an LA police detective told NJ.com, referencing some hand movements he'd seen Jackson make once in a game against the Redskins. While Jackson won't call them gang signs, he will admit to throwing up "hand gestures" in a display of that stubborn loyalty his mother describes. "If I score a touchdown or make a play and my boys at home can see me throwing up the area we're from, that's me showing them love," he says. "They weren't fortunate enough to make it where I'm at. All my friends wanted to be in the NFL growing up, but they weren't able to do that and I was. That doesn't mean I forgot about them. They're my boys, I grew up with them, and I'm going to give them love."

He's been dogged by other "maturity questions" -- reports of missed meetings, his occasional trolling of LeBron James on social media and a grievance filed by agent Drew Rosenhaus alleging Jackson failed to repay $400,000 in loans. (Jackson alleges the payments were illegal bribes.) But if everyone agrees that he never broke any laws or NFL regulations, then the overriding concern surrounding Jackson boils down to some people's discomfort with his ongoing connections to his roots. Rather than taking Instagram photos with the likes of Theron Shaker, the thinking seems to go, Jackson should be distancing himself from his past, not broadcasting it. Never mind that Shaker was acquitted of any wrongdoing. Never mind that this thinking requires Jackson to behave as if the first 18 years of his life were void of real relationships and authentic experiences. Long-standing connections, normal and healthy for everyone else, are "troubling" when it comes to Jackson.

IT DOESN'T HELP Jackson's case that since June of last year, prosecutors have handed down two separate murder indictments against former Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez, who is rumored to be affiliated with the Bloods. But according to Harry Edwards, a professor emeritus of sociology at UC Berkeley who also serves as a consultant for the 49ers, the NFL's gang worries are just beginning.

To explain why, Edwards points to a shift in player demographics -- two-thirds of current NFL players are black, compared with 12 percent in 1959. He thinks that shift is only going to escalate, in part because of the epidemic of brain injuries that already has wealthier white families shuffling their sons away from the sport's risks. An HBO Real Sports/Marist poll from October of last year showed that 66 percent of Americans with a household income of $50,000 or more had heard a great deal or a good amount about football head injuries, compared with just 47 percent earning less. The same poll showed that 20 percent of nonwhites had heard nothing about football-related concussions, compared with 12 percent of whites. "In a decade, the only people who are still playing football will be African-Americans and working-class people," says Edwards.

Edwards predicts that as the talent pool skews even more black and working class, the "baggage" that comes with these players will only become more prevalent. So, he says, the NFL needs to find ways to better understand players' struggles to balance career and background. "What the Eagles were dealing with in terms of trying to come to grips with DeSean is what the whole league should be preparing for," he says. "Because that's who's going to be playing football. To think you're not going to find anybody in football with baggage is preposterous."

Today, Gayle Jackson says that what she finds most hurtful about the rumors hanging over her son is that they insult the memory of Bill Jackson, who died of pancreatic cancer in 2009. "Now, you're talking about a father who went to his grave making sure he was keeping this kid out of trouble," she says.

At lunch, when Jackson's train of thought brings him back to memories of his dad, he opens up a bit, his voice reflecting an admiration and respect the way a proud soldier's might when talking about his time in the military. He says that after his father died, it was those "certain" people from his childhood who helped him navigate his grief. "As far as having certain people around me," he says, "people who in the middle of that whole time helped me get past that and get to where I'm at. Once I get here, I'm supposed to forget that they helped me?" He shakes his head. "That doesn't make sense. I'm a firm believer that when someone helps you get to where you're at, you show your appreciation."

Jackson says the best lesson he has learned over the past few months is that "your private time is your private time, and you don't always have to show people what you're doing" on Instagram and the like. Otherwise, he's going to stick to the formula that's been working for him for years, ever since Team Jackson came together like Voltron to build him into the man he is today, ever since Bill Jackson looked at a 5-year-old no heavier than a sack of flour and told him he was going to be an NFL star.

When I ask Jackson if he feels pressure to prove himself in Washington this year, a burden to silence his doubters -- from those who say he's too small to those who say he's a diva to those who say he's a gang-affiliated liability -- he smiles. "I don't feel no pressure, man," he says. "I been feeling pressure since I was a little kid, since I was walking down the street in Crenshaw, Calif. The pressure on this side is a little better."

Of that, DeSean Jackson seems quite certain.

RB Alfred Morris

Alfred Morris hopes to continue to get carries under new coach Jay Gruden

By Jason Reid
The Washington Post
June 26, 2014

RICHMOND — Not everything on the Washington Redskins was broken. New Coach Jay Gruden inherited a rushing offense in good condition and kept it. Having running back Alfred Morris on the roster made the decision easy.

After thriving in Washington's highly successful zone-read system, Morris is confident entering his third season. Being comfortable in his role helps.

For the past four seasons, the stretch-zone play has been a staple. On stretch plays, offensive linemen block an area rather than a specific player. They move toward the sideline in an effort to create running lanes for backs, who either run outside or cut back based on the defense. Morris often made the right call.

In NFL history, only eight players rushed for more yards in their first two seasons than the 2,888 Morris produced. He also scored 20 touchdowns and had an efficient 4.7-yard average. Gruden noticed.

Driven by ego, many first-time head coaches would have scrapped what former coach Mike Shanahan created. But Gruden isn't committed to only one way of doing things. Do you know what you call that? A strength.

Offensive coordinator Sean McVay, a holdover from the previous regime, wasn't surprised.

"That's what makes Jay a great coach," McVay said. "He's going to adjust. He's going to fit his scheme, really tailor it, to fit his players' abilities. Running the football is one of the things we've been able to do a nice job of. In that scheme, Alfred is as good as you can ask for."

An outstanding cut-back runner, Morris is ideally suited for stretch plays. He follows blockers well, surveys the defense quickly and runs decisively.

At a time when the running game has been de-emphasized in the pass-heavy league, the Redskins have continued to rely on theirs. They topped the NFL in rushing in 2012 and finished fifth last season. It'll be interesting to see how the Redskins roll under Gruden.

During Gruden's three seasons directing the Cincinnati Bengals' offense, some team observers were critical of him for passing too much. Gruden will be the Redskins' play-caller.

Morris has heard speculation about Gruden's plans. Perhaps he won't be as important in the offense this season. Wisely, Morris is taking a wait-and-see approach.

"Yeah, a lot of people have been making comments about coach passing a lot," Morris said. "But from what we're doing in practice, it seems like there's no difference.

"I'm not worried about it. If my carries do go down that's fine. I'll just have to make the most of the carries I do get. . . . I can adjust quickly. I'm pretty easy going."

He's also all grown up. Morris already has experienced the extremes of professional sports. In his rookie season, Washington won the NFC East. A season ago, the Redskins were a 3-13 mess.

To his credit, Morris stayed out of the drama. He showed almost as much skill at sidestepping off-the-field issues as he did eluding would-be tacklers.

Early in training camp this year, Morris has emerged as a team leader. Between plays, younger backs have sought his counsel about everything from how to take the proper angles on zone-read plays to the proper way to pass protect. Fullback Darrel Young enjoys observing the interaction.

"He's doing for those guys what older guys did for us," Young said. "Listening to him speak, answering questions from you guys [journalists], it really is so different now."

Here's what hasn't changed: Morris's commitment to his teammates. Despite rushing for almost 1,300 yards last season, Morris was disappointed he wasn't as productive as in his rookie year, when he set a franchise record with more than 1,600 yards.

Morris isn't focused on individual accomplishments. By having a better season, Morris figures, he could have helped the Redskins more. Morris means what he says, Young said.

"When you've got a guy who rushes for that many yards and makes the Pro Bowl, and his whole mind-set is that he let the team down, it tells you a lot," Young said. "You know he's going to do everything he can to be great."

Morris is working on it. He hasn't been a threat in the passing game — the former sixth-round pick has 20 career receptions — but he wants that to change. Gruden and McVay will give him opportunities throughout training camp and the preseason, “and he's already catching the ball better,” McVay said. “That's something that he's going to continue to work on.”

“He's as conscientious a player as I've been around. And any player in this league can look at himself critically and ask, ‘What can I do better?’ He's that type of guy.”

They say that sometimes the best moves are the ones you don't make. For the Redskins, that applies to keeping their running game intact.

LB Trent Murphy

Gritty Trent Murphy aims to carve out a role among Redskins' outside linebackers

By Liz Clarke
The Washington Post
July 28, 2014

RICHMOND — Five days into Washington Redskins training camp, here's what coaches and teammates find so impressive about Trent Murphy, the team's 6-foot-5, 258-pound rookie outside linebacker:

- He reports to practice early.
- He has the playbook nearly committed to memory.
- He's quick for a big man, and a quick study on matters of technique.
- He's versatile enough to be used multiple ways, blessed with smarts, nimble feet and a long reach.

And should he be called upon, Murphy can also rope a steer, heave a hot-water heater and flip a tractor tire.

“He's a true, football-playing grinding machine,” Redskins Coach Jay Gruden said of the team's top draft pick as camp got underway.

On Monday, Murphy flashed his promise in a drill with the first-team defense, plowing past right guard Chris Chester for what would have been a surefire sack of quarterback Robert Griffin III.

That's not to say that Murphy, whose 15 sacks led the NCAA last year, emerged from Stanford a finished product. Earlier in camp he lost containment on one play that cost the defense a 70-yard touchdown.

But by all accounts, he's the sort of player who won't repeat the same mistake twice. He's as hard on himself as any coach.

“I'm amazed at how quickly he has grasped the playbook,” fourth-year linebacker Ryan Kerrigan said. “The coaches have really put a good amount on him as a rookie, and he has handled it so smoothly.”

The Redskins have invested plenty in their linebacking corps in recent years, expending first-round picks on Brian Orakpo in 2009 and Kerrigan in 2011, but they haven't gotten tremendous payback.

The pass rush was a particular weakness last season. It wasn't so much for lack of talent on the part of Orakpo and Kerrigan, who boast three Pro Bowls between them, as it was a lack of depth.

The selection of Murphy in the second round of the draft (47th overall) — along with the signing of defensive end Jason Hatcher, who had 11 sacks for Dallas last season but has yet to see action in camp after undergoing knee surgery in June — represents an effort to remedy that.

With the Redskins ranked 20th against the pass last season, Murphy won't have the luxury of a lengthy apprenticeship. Coaches want to throw him into the mix quickly, sometimes lining him up alongside Kerrigan and Orakpo, other times spelling them.

"We're all going to kind of flip around," said Kerrigan, who worked at right outside linebacker Monday after taking snaps the previous days on the left side. "We want to be more versatile this year and have more options."

Murphy should give defensive coordinator Jim Haslett one more piece to add to that jigsaw puzzle, as well as a sorely needed insurance policy should Kerrigan or Orakpo, who's playing under a one-year contract with the franchise tag, get injured.

One of six children, Murphy, who could pass for an outsize younger brother of NASCAR's Dale Earnhardt Jr., was reared in Mesa, Ariz., where hard, physical labor often doubles as fun. He counts wrestling steer among his hobbies and lettered in basketball, track and football in high school.

At Stanford, he excelled in the 3-4 defense and in his junior year also threw the discus for the Cardinal track and field team.

Rather than enter the 2013 NFL draft after his senior year, Murphy returned to Stanford for a fifth year of eligibility and was named captain of the squad that won the Pacific-12 championship.

He prepared for the Redskins preseason by joining his father, who runs a plumbing company, and brother in a workout regimen they invented called "The Big Man's Relay." It starts with a "farmer's walk," in which you carry two water heaters as if toting two giant suitcases, proceeds to sledge-hammering and flipping a giant tire, and closes with a water heater toss.

"They can make something out of nothing," Murphy said with a laugh. "It's pretty impressive what they do back there."

Monday at Redskins training camp, outside linebackers coach Brian Baker was seeking more refined technique as he ran his charges — Orakpo, Kerrigan, sixth-year veteran Rob Jackson, Adrian Robinson, Gabe Miller and Murphy — through pass-rushing drills.

A former linebacker at Maryland, Baker, 52, represents a significant part of Haslett's effort to upgrade the linebacking corps. He was hired in January to coach the team's outside linebackers, while Kirk Olivadotti was named to coach the inside linebackers.

And since camp opened, Baker, who's credited with developing such Pro Bowlers as Julius Peppers, Jay Ratliff and Robert Porcher in previous NFL stints, has displayed a meticulous eye for detail.

"Eyes up! Eyes up all the time!" Baker barked as Orakpo, Kerrigan and the others took turns racing toward a tackling dummy, knocking it down, then cutting toward a second dummy with an outstretched "arm" and taking a furious swipe at an imaginary football.

"Speed and hips!" Baker yelled. "That's how you get to the quarterback! That's how you finish plays. That's how you get off blocks!"

Lean and fit, Baker held the dummy to make it more difficult and fixated on each player's positioning, shouting adjustments like a benevolent drill sergeant, more intent on building his players up than tearing them down.

"Trent, drop your hips!" Baker shouted, seeking to maximize the rookie's leverage, and ordered a do-over.

"Much better! Much better!"

Murphy soaked it up like a sponge.

"Love Coach Baker," Murphy said. "You can tell he wakes up every morning and he prays and then he starts thinking about how he's going to make us better. He brings it every day — to the meeting room, to the field. He's intense."

Kerrigan shares the sentiment.

"He is very particular, and that's what's awesome," Kerrigan said. "He sees little things as a rusher that I would never see. He talks about when your hips are upfield, that's where you're going to go. But if your hips are directed at the quarterback, that's where you're going. It sounds common sense. But to get your body to do that, that's a tough thing when you've got a 320-pound guy in your way."

Camp may be just five days old, but Murphy says he can't believe how much his football knowledge has already grown.

"I'm just trying to get better every day and play faster," he said. "I'm just trying to fit in wherever the coaches will put me in."

LB Brian Orakpo

Redskins' Brian Orakpo hopes to make star turn in 2014

By Jim Corbett
USA Today
June 5, 2014

ASHBURN, Va. — Several Washington Redskins players seemed starstruck by Oscar-winning actor and longtime 'Skins fan Matthew McConaughey's presence during Wednesday's organized team activities.

However outside linebacker Brian Orakpo, McConaughey's old buddy, wasn't among those who took turns introducing themselves.

"I love Matt. We've been friends a while," Orakpo, the former University of Texas star, told USA TODAY Sports. "He's a Longhorn. He's always been a fan of mine.

"It's ironic that I got drafted to his childhood team. So we've always had this bond."

Besides, Orakpo is focused on cementing his own A-list star power beyond any doubt. His 2014 challenge is about justifying that $11.455 million franchise tag tender he signed this offseason. Now Orakpo is driven to prove his worth to first-year coach Jay Gruden by delivering a performance worthy of a long-term extension.

"I need to be that guy," said Orakpo, who's heading into his sixth season. "This defense is built for us to go out there and make plays. So I need to go out there and continue to make plays each and every time.

"You can talk about contract this and that. Throw all of that out the window. I'm signed for the 2014 season. ... I need to go out there and make plays. I need to go out there and be a force."

Orakpo has managed 39½ career sacks despite several major injuries, including a pectoral tear that cost him nearly all of the 2012 season. He longs to prove he's worthy of inclusion among the game's elite pass rushers.

Linebackers coach Brian Baker has Orakpo working on utilizing his hands more to shed blocks and set up his speed-to-power pass-rush moves.

"I'm working on my hands and footwork coordination — it's brand new for me," Orakpo said. "It's teaching me how to work my man. ... I love to be so versatile when I rush. I'm still keeping that same aggression, that same speed off the edge with proper hand use — working half the man with proper hand placements on the offensive tackle."

So is he feeling any heat?

"I'm not really a pressure guy. You can't really say I feel pressure coming into this season," Orakpo said. "I've got a bad taste in my mouth from last year. And that's something I need to erase. ... These coaches expressed to me that I'm that guy. I need to go out there to be that force that we all know I can be.

"There's no pressure on myself. Go out there, do my job, don't do more than I can. ... But at the same time, go out there and make plays.

"We've got a lot of different calls. I can go out there and do my thing, do what I know I can and not worry about making mistakes."

Orakpo trained in Austin with fellow ex-Longhorns linebacker Keenan Robinson, the 2012 fourth-round pick slated to replace retired London Fletcher in Washington's lineup.

Like Orakpo entering last season, Robinson is coming off a torn pectoral muscle that sidelined him in 2013. But so far, Robinson has impressed making the defensive calls from Fletcher's vacated "Mike" linebacker slot.

"I always knew Keenan was going to be great," Orakpo said. "He just needed to get healthy.

"He and I worked extremely hard this offseason. You look at his size (6-3, 238 pound), he can run, he can hit, he can cover any tight end in this league. ... He's a player I feel like is going to have a breakout season.

"It's hard to replace a guy like London Fletcher. But we already had his replacement in house in Keenan Robinson."

Now Orakpo hopes he and Robinson will be under the same roof for a while.

TE Jordan Reed

Redskins tight end Jordan Reed formed a bond with his coach Sean McVay

RICHMOND — After hearing that Washington Redskins tight ends coach Sean McVay had been promoted to offensive coordinator in January, tight end Jordan Reed called McVay to offer his congratulations and ask a question. Reed and McVay grew close last season, and Reed wondered whether McVay would still have time for him.

"Can you believe that?" asked McVay, who smiled and shook his head while recalling the conversation Friday during a break from practice. "He actually thought I'd be too busy for him. You always make time for guys like him."

Especially if you're an assistant coach who hopes to remain employed.

Coach Jay Gruden has big plans for the young tight end, whose combination of size, speed — he's listed at 6 feet 2, 237 pounds and covers the 40-yard dash in 4.7 seconds — and route running make him a major matchup problem for defenses. And with deep-threat wide receiver DeSean Jackson often expected to draw double teams, Reed and others in the Redskins' receiving corps should benefit from single coverage.

No one needs to tell Gruden how to best use Reed. However, if Gruden ever has a question about Reed, he can call on McVay, who knows him better than anyone in the organization. The work they did together last fall could help Reed blast off this year. From the start, they developed a model coach-player relationship.

"He's obviously a great player, but I really enjoy him as a person, too," McVay said. "He's a great guy, so you want to continue to be involved with him."

Generally, head coaches are father figures, disciplinarians. Position coaches are supposed to be like big brothers. The best skillfully walk the line of being a supervisor, teacher and friend. They're the ones in whom players usually confide.

During three-plus seasons coaching Redskins tight ends, McVay had a good rapport with all players who reported to him. He took pride in working hard and being honest, figuring that's the best way to lead. For that, he earned the players' respect.

A third-round selection from Florida in the 2013 draft, Reed quickly learned McVay had his back. Whatever he needed — another question answered in the meeting room, extra work after practice or a quick tip on the sideline during games — McVay delivered way before Reed ascended to the top of the depth chart.

Some assistants attempt to latch onto fast-risers, hoping to advance their careers, and ignore the players at the bottom of the roster, but “Coach McVay always tries to help everybody,” Reed told me recently. “You know if he says something, he means it.”

Reed peppered McVay with questions about every aspect of playing tight end in the NFL, his role in the Redskins’ offense and what he could do to improve. Although Reed began the season as the third-string tight end behind veterans Fred Davis and Logan Paulsen, coaches and players privately raved about the big plays he made in closed practices.

It was only a matter of time, many said, before Reed supplanted Davis as the starter. Davis accelerated the process by continuing to be a knucklehead — you can’t repeatedly fall asleep in meetings and then complain about how you’re being used — and it became clear Reed was too good to remain on the sideline.

In preparation for Reed’s starting assignment, McVay came up with an idea he hoped would make the transition as smooth as possible. At the team hotel the night before games, McVay and Reed reviewed the game plan. In rooms used for team meetings, they would spend hours discussing routes, potential problems the defense could present and counters to the defense.

Obviously, the sessions paid off. Reed emerged as an integral member of the passing game.

His breakout performance occurred in an Oct. 20 victory over the Chicago Bears, when he had nine catches for 134 yards — the highest totals ever for a Redskins rookie tight end — and scored a touchdown. In an impressive first season cut short because of a concussion, Reed finished second on the team with 45 receptions for 499 yards (an 11.1-yard average). He also had three touchdown receptions, tying him for second on the team.

McVay has seen enough to express confidence Reed “is capable of being as good as he wants to be. It’s just a matter of being able to take care of himself and stay healthy.”

Reed wasn’t as forthcoming as he should have been about the lingering effects of hits to his head. He says that won’t happen again. McVay and new tight ends coach Wes Phillips, whose grandfather, Bum, and father, Wade, were former NFL head coaches, will hold Reed to it.

McVay is respectful of Phillips’s relationships with the tight ends. Phillips needs time — and space — to get to know the players he’s now responsible for guiding.

And McVay is busy helping Gruden build the new playbook and serving as the de facto quarterbacks coach. McVay’s primary job is to help Gruden get Robert Griffin III back on track.

But if Reed needs something, McVay will find the time.

Keenan Robinson, healthy again, is primed for signal-calling duties

By Liz Clarke

RICHMOND — Four days into training camp, Redskins linebacker Keenan Robinson is still practicing full out. And that represents a major step forward for the 6-foot-3, 238-pound former Texas standout who's expected to inherit the signal-calling duties handled so ably these last seven years by London Fletcher, who retired last season.

It was on opening day of camp last season that Robinson, a speedy inside linebacker whom Washington drafted with a fourth-round pick in 2012, injured his left pectoral muscle. The injury sidelined him for the season and was particularly painful because he'd only recently recovered from an injured right pectoral that landed him on injured reserve in Week 12 of his rookie season.

As he launches into his third season with the team, Robinson said he's eager to establish his durability in the eyes of Coach Jay Gruden, who's ordering up more contact in the preseason that players were accustomed to under Mike Shanahan.

"They know I can run," Robinson said of Gruden and his defensive staff. "They know I can cover. The question is, will I be able to tackle? Will I be able to take on blocks? Do the things that I was able to do before injury?"

To make his case, Robinson said he's totally on board with the idea of putting on pads and tackling full speed often during the preseason.

"You only get better at what you practice," Robinson said. "And it's going to help me prove to coaches I'm back to normal, and I won't have those issues in season."

Robinson has been lining up in practice at the middle linebacker — or "mike" — position, alongside Perry Riley. As such, he'll figure in all running plays and make the defensive calls that Fletcher did for so many years.

"I always think, not so much 'What would London do?' but what should we do in this situation on the field? How would he react? How would he fill the run? Cover a pass? He showed me lot of things — veteran moves that were very helpful. I can take some of those things and apply it to the game."

Though he didn't take a snap last season, Robinson said he did worked on becoming a better player by watching as intently as he could.

"I learned just how to be a professional player, how to learn, mentally how to prepare. I couldn't get the reps, but I know the plays. As soon as we came back for [off-season workouts], I knew all the plays."

Keenan Robinson could emerge from shadows as Redskins' man in middle

By Brian McNally

Redskins linebacker Keenan Robinson became the forgotten man.

After his season ended one series into training camp last summer in Richmond, Robinson took no blame during a disastrous year for Washington's defense. He was a spectator, nothing more. But coaches believed Robinson would return to make a difference. So, too, did his teammates. Now is his chance.

With the retirement of linebacker London Fletcher, the Redskins need a player on the inside to take over next to the established Perry Riley, Jr. But torn pectoral muscles cut Robinson's rookie season short and ended last year's before it began.

There is still some caution when discussing what Robinson can bring — the size at 6-foot-3, 238 pounds, and the speed to stay with the NFL's new breed of big, fast, physical tight ends who can run and catch and make life miserable for linebackers in coverage. But that potential all goes to waste if Robinson isn't on the field.

"In college I never got hurt. In high school I never got hurt," Robinson said. "I never had to deal with injuries, especially injuries that kept me out for, shoot, six games my first year; my second year, the whole season. Coming back from it I learned to really appreciate the game."

And so Robinson, drafted out of the University of Texas in the fourth round in 2012, worked with the starting unit during Wednesday's organized team activities practice. He knows defensive coordinator Jim Haslett's version of the 3-4 defense and has an advantage over free-agent linebackers like Darryl Sharpton and Akeem Jordan who have starting experience with their previous teams and a track record to work with.

Robinson must hold off those players to earn a starting job. But through his recovery process, Haslett made sure that Robinson maintained the faith of the coaching staff, even explaining how he'd be used once he returned to full health. It took a while. Robinson says he's there now.

"He's a lot further ahead than we anticipated, stamina-wise, mentally," Washington coach Jay Gruden said. "He's doing a great job. The linebacker position is hard to judge in shorts. But it is exciting to see him run around. He's a very fluid athlete."

Robinson, 24, has a comfort level with fellow Texas Longhorn Brian Orakpo, an outside linebacker who knows what it's like to miss a season thanks to a torn pectoral muscle. That happened to him early in 2012 after he played just two games. Orakpo and Robinson worked out together this spring in Austin.

It's a difficult injury to forget because there are few warning signs the pectoral is about to tear and it's a long recovery process. Robinson tore his right pectoral that same 2012 season when Dallas Cowboys tight end Jason Witten fell on him in a Nov. 22 win. There was little Robinson could do about that one. It is a contact sport, after all.

It is the second tear that is a concern. Robinson simply put his hand in the dirt during the first series of drills in Richmond last summer on the first day of training camp and the left pectoral gave out. This time an entire season was lost. But potential remains.

“Keenan’s doing a phenomenal job. I always knew Keenan was going to be great,” Orakpo said. “You look at his size, he can run, he can hit, he can cover any tight end in this league. And he’s a player that I feel like is gonna have a breakout season and surprise a lot of guys.”

“That’s why we didn’t really go after any big name inside backers to replace London. It’s hard to replace a guy like London Fletcher, but we already had it in house in Keenan Robinson.”

Fletcher remains a confidant. He and Robinson spoke just last month and “staying persistent” was the mantra from the old linebacker. It is a message that resonates with Robinson considering Fletcher played on teams that won titles and made the playoffs and also on teams that were routinely terrible. He’s seen it all. And so while Robinson is healthy now and working his way into a starting spot, he’s also not taking anything for granted.

“Right now, nothing’s set, the starters and all that. We have a long time before those decisions are made,” Robinson said. “They won’t be made until training camp. I’m just filling in, trying to pick up where London left off. I’m just trying to do my part and make sure there’s no letdown.”

S Phillip Thomas

‘Redshirt’ season behind him, Phillip Thomas ready to help Redskins’ secondary

By Zac Boyer
The Washington Times

Left with little to do last season aside from receiving treatment on his injured left foot and learning his responsibilities within the Washington Redskins’ defense, Phillip Thomas took to considering his rookie year as more of a redshirt year.

If anything, Thomas didn’t want all of that responsibility to fall on him when he was finally healthy.

“It just gave me time to learn the playbook, see what other people are doing right and trying to mimic them, seeing what they’re doing wrong and making sure I keep it out of my game,” Thomas said. “That’s what everybody tells me. It’s a feel-good thing to just say it was a redshirt year, because of course I don’t want to be out, but it gave me time to mature and learn the defense.”

A fourth-round pick last April out of Fresno State, Thomas was penciled in as the Redskins’ starting strong safety when training camp opened, especially with Brandon Meriweather still recovering after tearing the ACL in his right knee the previous season.

At 6-foot-2 and 210 pounds, Thomas led the NCAA’s Football Bowl Subdivision with eight interceptions in 2012, his senior year, and was one of three players the Redskins drafted in an attempt to inject a ball-hawking mentality into their defensive backfield.

Whatever potential Thomas showed during two weeks of training camp was never realized. In the Redskins’ first preseason game on Aug. 8, Thomas missed a tackle while twisting his left foot into the turf, causing a Lisfranc sprain — a tear of any number of ligaments that connect the metatarsals to the base of the foot.

It took nearly a week for Thomas to receive the diagnosis. When he did, he was given a 4-to-6-month window for rehabilitation and recovery.

“It scared me,” Thomas said. “They said this Lisfranc injury could be a real serious one. Fortunately, through God’s hands, He healed me and brought me back. I feel great. I feel like I was before, and now it’s just time to keep progressing.”

Thomas, originally from Bakersfield, California, remained in Ashburn all offseason to continue receiving treatment on his left foot. By early March, he was cleared to begin cutting at full speed — one of the last major hurdles in his recovery.

He was fully cleared to participate during the start of the Redskins’ offseason workouts in early April, and the beginning of organized team activities last week gave him the mental confidence he needed to know he had recovered.

At one point during team drills on Thursday, Thomas dived and snagged an off-target pass from Colt McCoy for an interception, drawing applause from his teammates in the secondary and praise from Raheem Morris, the Redskins’ defensive backs coach.

“He’s just getting back in the flow,” coach Jay Gruden said afterward. “Raheem’s working with him and he’s doing a good job. Between he and Meriweather, we expect good things from that safety spot.”

The Redskins’ hodgepodge secondary has been one of their biggest issues for the past several seasons, and the hope is that Thomas can help solidify that position, not just this year but for at least the next two.

After missing out on signing any of the marquee free-agent safeties this March, and knowing there wasn’t an appealing candidate in the draft last month, the Redskins instead brought back Meriweather and Ryan Clark, who spent the last eight seasons with the Pittsburgh Steelers after two in Washington.

They also have Bacarri Rambo, who struggled to read offenses and make tackles during an up-and-down rookie year, and Tanard Jackson, reinstated last month after missing two seasons because of a league suspension for a failed drug test.

“Brandon and Ryan are veterans in this league,” Thomas said. “They’ve been doing it for a long time, and you know, I can learn a lot from them still. It’s just going out there and competing and just putting everything I have on that film and leaving it up to the coaches to make it a hard decision.”

To ensure he gets on the field this season, Thomas said he has been focusing on picking up responsibilities on special teams as well.

And to make sure he stays on it, he’s done all he can to forget about the injury having ever taken place.

“You could tell I was thinking about it,” Thomas said, referring to his first few days back at practice. “You could tell I was giving a little ground to it. But now, when it’s time to play football, I’ve got to put that all in the back of my head and go out there and leave it all on the field.”

Trent Williams, athletic freak, stands out at Redskins training camp

By Jason Reid
The Washington Post
July 30, 2014

RICHMOND – Pro Bowl left tackle Trent Williams is such a gifted athlete, he once played center flawlessly on short notice in college after never having previously worked at the position. But that was nothing, Williams said after practice Wednesday.

If Williams lost about “50 pounds and practiced, I’d be a nice tight end, or maybe even an outside linebacker,” he said. “Who knows?”

This much is certain: Coach Jay Gruden has no interest in Williams changing positions. The anchor of the Redskins’ line, Williams, beginning his fifth season, has matured into the franchise cornerstone former head coach Mike Shanahan envisioned he would become.

Williams’s rare combination of strength, quickness and agility has helped him develop into a two-time Pro Bowler. And over the past few seasons, Williams has become a better student of the game. Film study is as much a part of his preparation as weight training.

The people who depend on Williams are in good hands.

“Definitely a good feeling to know he’s over there,” quarterback Robert Griffin III said recently.

Said running back Alfred Morris, “I don’t know what more you could want [in an offensive lineman]. If there is something, I’d like to know what it is.”

Around the NFL, Williams is what’s commonly known as a “freak.” The description is reserved for players who uncommon physical tools.

“I am a great athlete,” said Williams, who embraces being in a lead role. “I feel like I play offensive tackle the best.”

He does. But what about quarterback?

“I definitely could be” a quarterback, Williams said. “I do have a talented arm. Not to toot my own horn.”

Of course, it would be difficult for Williams, listed at 6 feet 5, 337 pounds, to get under center. While protecting Griffin’s “blind side,” Williams moves better than most at his position.

Not surprisingly, Williams has stood out during camp. Often, Gruden and offensive line coach Chris Foerster have praised him. There’s a lot of good stuff to say.

Williams prefers to talk about the rest of his unit. The offensive line is coming along nicely, Williams said.

“It’s a great group,” he said. “We only added one new guy – left guard Shawn Lauvao – but Shawn is a vet. He doesn’t have that learning curve that a lot of new guys have.”

“The more we play together, the better off we’ll be. Obviously, we’ve got to get that cohesiveness down. ... We need a little time to build that chemistry. But we’re coming along.”

Williams is trying to bring the rookies along, too. He’s available to lend a helping hand whenever it’s needed. Tackle Morgan Moses has already benefitted from Williams’s experience.

“He’s definitely progressing,” Williams said of Moses. “He works hard. He’s very diligent in the meetings. He takes a lot of notes.”

Griffin being at full strength has helped the entire offense. Without the bulky knee brace, the 2012 NFL offensive rookie of the year is moving well.

“He’s 100 percent. He has the confidence that he once had before the injury,” Williams said. “Everything just happens a lot quicker. It’s a lot smoother. The team runs a lot better.”
